House Grants NYA $100,000,000; Kills C. I. O. Relief Boost

Votes 207-65, 201-82 On Two Proposals; $125,000,000 for PWA Retained

BULLETIN

The House passed the relief bill shortly after 1:00 a. m. today.

By the Associated Press.

A solid phalanx of Republican and Democratic House votes slowly remade the Nation's relief administration early today by prescribing a series of new rules under which WPA must operate.

It also voted abandonment of the Federal theater project.

One regulation requires that building projects financed wholly by the Federal Government must not cost more than $50,000, and that on projects paid for in part by States or localities, the Government's contribution must not exceed $40,000. Another limits the cost of materials to $7 per month per WPA worker.

In addition, tentative approval was given to an entirely new administrative setup for WPA. Instead of the one-man administrator, first Harry L. Hopkins and now Col. F. C. Harrington, the bill would establish a bipartisan, three-man board.

WPA "Careerists" Hit

And, considered highly important by many members, a provision was accepted under which all WPA workers except heads of families 45 years of age or older must be discharged after 18 months' service to make room for the thousands on the waiting list. Those discharged would be eligible for re-employment after 60 days.

This provision, which its sponsors privately said was aimed at the Workers' Alliance, and publicly asserted was intended to eliminate WPA "careerists," was bitterly fought by members of a small bloc. Time and again, the members of a small bloc, led by Representatives Voorhis (Democrat), California, and Marcantonio (American Labor Party), New York, attempted to loosen the restrictions, but lost.

Bipartisan Alliance

The Democratic-Republican alliance, including all the House economy advocates, won its ... however, largely by making concessions to the New Deal on amounts to be appropriated. Thus the House tentatively approved a $1,477,000,000 outlay for work relief, the sum requested by President Roosevelt, and later yielded to the extent of a compromise on the appropriation for the National Youth Administration.

The President had asked for $123,000,000 and the Appropriations Committee had recommended $81,000,000. The difference was compromised on the floor with the tentative approval of a $100,000,000 disbursement.

In all, prior to final action on the big relief bill, the House gave its tentative approval to appropriations totaling $1,735,000,000 for various relief activities, including, in addition to WPA and NYA, the Farm Security Administration, relief for needy Indians and related activities.

Workers' Alliance Rebuffed

Earlier in the day, the C. I. O. and the Workers' Alliance, a union of WPA workers which has been attacked on the floor as under Communist leadership, received a resounding rebuff. The House refused to increase the WPA appropriation

2 Felled as Mercury Hits 96, Year's Record

Veteran Senator George Norris, of Nebraska, fanning himself with a Senate bill, will be homeward bound if the mercury continues to rise in Washington

Blistering heat which broke all records for the year, abetted by excessive humidity, yesterday caused one prostration here, sent in a fire alarm and gave Washington the dubious honor of hottest spot on the Eastern Seaboard.

Tony Tonali, 54, of 1565 Thirty-third street northwest, collapsed yesterday afternoon near his home after completing his day's work. He was treated for heat prostration at Georgetown Hospital.

A heart attack, possibly induced by heat, sent John Rigsbee, 29, of Durham, N. C., to Emergency Hospital. He collapsed at Fourth street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest about 2 p. m.

A fire alarm, attributed by police to heat melting a sprinkler head in a show window, sent three engines, two trucks and two battalion chiefs to Kann's department store, Eighth and D streets northwest, about 8 p. m. Firemen, with no blaze to fight, busied themselves undressing water-soaked mannikins.

Yesterday's highest temperature was 96 degrees at 4 p. m., the mercury climbing steadily from a minimum of 71 at 5 a. m. Relative humidity, which intensified the oppressive heat, was 42 per cent.

Plans to Give Idle Funds Job, Says Roosevelt

'Self-Liquidating Projects' Are Urged To Boost Business

President Roosevelt revealed yesterday that a new spending-lending program designed to put idle men and money to work by financing construction of "self-liquidating projects" was taking form.

Plans call for Government aid in financing equipment purchases for railroads, housing construction, toll roads, municipal express highways, boulevards through congested areas, rural electrification projects and rural rehabilitation and farm tenant aid programs.

The President made clear that discussions were in the initial stages. He said an effort was being made to find some self-liquidating projects, and that this usually was done every six months.

Laws May Be Asked

Nevertheless, he admitted that it was possible legislation of a minor nature, such as authority for increasing loan limits of lending agencies, might be sought at this session of Congress.

Asked whether he would ask for creation of a new lending corporation, he said not necessarily. He then mentioned, as an illustration, the possible creation within the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of a railroad equipment corporation.

The question has been raised, he explained, whether the Government

President Suggests Tax Base Be Wider

Proposes Lower Exemptions, Higher Levy on Middle Bracket

By the United Press.

President Roosevelt yesterday proposed lowered tax exemptions on individual incomes and slight increases on "middle bracket" incomes, as the House Ways and Means Committee whipped into final form a revenue bill limited to corporate tax relief.

Mr. Roosevelt frankly said he did not expect the individual income tax changes this session, and voiced doubt that large revenue yields would result. But he said it would give added responsibilities of citizenship to a large group not now covered by the tax laws.

Chairman Doughton of the House Ways and Means Committee said he thought the President probably meant proposed broadening of the income tax structure at the base should be considered "next year."

Was La Follette's Plan

Doughton already has proposed that either a special House sub-committee or a joint committee of both Houses return to Washington in October to draft a general tax revision bill.

It was the first time the President had publicly espoused lowering income tax exemptions below the present $1,000 allowance for single persons and the $2,500 married couple exemption, although Senator La Fol-

Senators Reject D. C. Sales Levy

Committee May Drop Income Tax; Stop-Gap Revenue Measure Indicated

By James D. Secrest.

A stop-gap revenue act for the third successive year was indicated for the District yesterday after the Senate District Committee quietly rejected a recommended revival of the sales tax and showed signs of dropping the income tax for another year.

Chairman King refused to admit that all hope of salvaging the 1940 revenue act was lost, but he confessed that the tax controversy is now in a state of utter confusion.

While a final decision was delayed until next week, District officials privately predicted that the business privilege tax and a real estate levy of between $1.60 and $1.75 will be adopted and the result of the $10,000 Pond study will be as negative as was that of the $50,000 Jacobs survey.

Several Courses Open

A bare possibility remains, however, that the Senate District Committee will vote for a supplemental increase in the Federal contribution or a very low rate income tax or both, as well as a renewal of the present "emergency" taxes.

Senator Overton (Democrat), of Louisiana, showed a determination to press his demands for adoption of his fiscal relations formula on at least a larger lump-sum payment, and other members of the committee indorsed his plan.

Senator Hughes (Democrat), of Delaware, stated, after the conference with the citizens' advisory committee on taxation, that the committee should renew present taxes and "give the District as large a Federal contribution as is necessary to balance appropriations.

"This is the National Capital," he said, "and Congress should look after it."

Overton expressed the opinion that his proposed formula of assessing the Federal Government 20 per cent of the District's general revenue appropriations should be adopted as a base and then whatever additional taxes are necessary should be adopted.

Test Tax Plan Projected

Senator King said he saw little chance of enacting a broad-base tax act at this session in view of the fact that only two weeks remain until the end of the fiscal year.

"Perhaps we can write in an income tax with a low base and mild rate, however, to serve as a test," he said, "so that we will have more accurate data to work on next year."

He pointed out that the citizens' committee had been unable to furnish any reliable figures on the amount of revenue that could be raised through an income tax or the number of persons it would affect. Auditor Daniel J. Donovan and Jo V. Morgan, sole member of the Board of Tax Appeals, agreed to try to find additional statistics over the week-end.

The citizens committee, which recommends a revival of the income-sales tax plan as proposed in the Pond report, will meet again Monday afternoon to examine the

243 Taxis Pass Inspection While Only 126 'Flunk'

Taxicabs set a good record for mechanical safety yesterday when 243 of them passed the new compulsory inspection tests with only 126 "flunks"—and most of these for defective headlights. In the majority of cases, brakes and other safety features were approved.

A total of 236 cabs which failed to pass examination on first trial were re-inspected and approved, according to J. Earl Steinhauer, supervising inspector.

Inspection for the public will begin Monday at both stations, on West Virginia avenue northeast and at 615 Tenth street southwest. Temporary hours will be 8 a. m. to 7:30 p. m., and motorists will be notified to appear according to their license numbers.

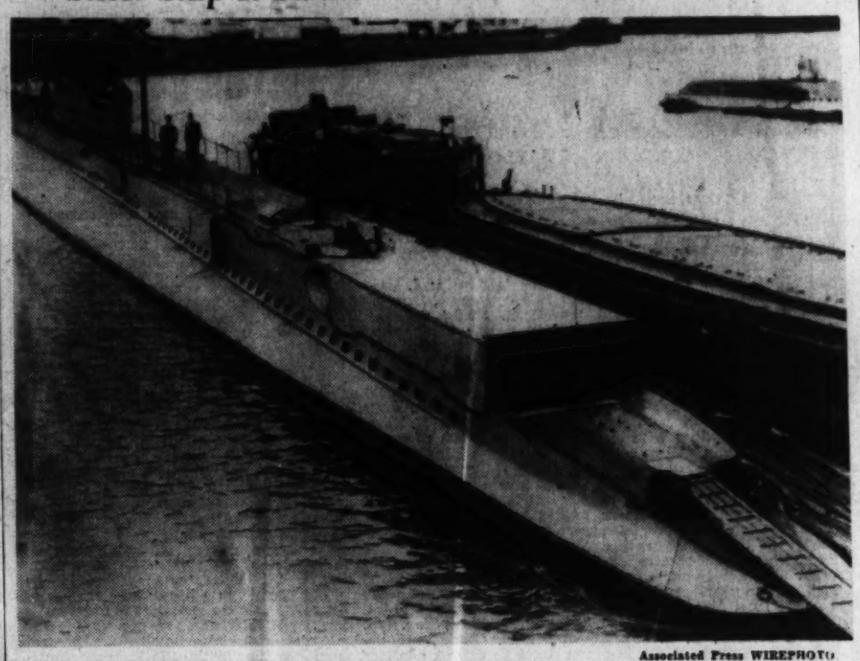
Maryland Man Dies in West River

Woodward A. Hicks, of Decatur Heights, Md., was drowned last night while swimming in the West River, near Annapolis, Md.

According to members of a party of five who were swimming with him from a boat anchored in the river, Hicks dived in to the river and failed to rise to the surface. Hicks and his wife rented a summer cottage at Avalon Shores, Md.

Hope Abandoned for 63 On French Submarine

Sister Ship of Sunken French Submarine Phenix



Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

The submarine Persee, shown in harbor at Cherbourg in 1932, after an explosion aboard her had killed one of the crew and injured several, is the sister ship of the French submarine Phenix which failed to reappear after a dive in the Bay of Cam Ranh, French Indo-China, with 63 men on board

Down 600 Feet Off Indo-China; Pressure Is Believed Enough To Crush Vessel

By the United Press.

Paris, June 16.—The government tonight officially abandoned hope for the lives of 63 officers and men entombed in the French submarine Phenix, which sank 600 feet to the bottom of the China Sea off the east coast of Indo-China in diving trials.

The 1,379-ton undersea craft, one of the finest of the French submarine fleet, slipped beneath the surface at about 10:30 p. m. Wednesday (E. S. T.) for what was to have been a half hour of routine underwater runs.

Tonight, more than 42 hours after her disappearance and 2 hours past the limit of her air supply, there was no trace of the Phenix or clew to the tragedy that had befallen her.

Submarine Deaths Now 188

Warships and seaplanes reported that she lay so deep that they could not locate her.

The Phenix sank 10 miles off the Bay of Cam Ranh, the "French Singapore" base 240 miles north of Saigon, bringing to 188 the toll of American, British and French lives lost in three submarine disasters within 24 days.

To 26 lives lost aboard the American submarine Squalus off Portsmouth, N. H., on May 23, and 99 men who died in the British submarine Thetis in the Irish Sea on June 1 were added the lives of four officers and 59 men of the Phenix. Most of them were hardy Breton conscripts of 20 and 21, sons of fishing folk.

No Diving Bells or "Lungs"

The men aboard the 1,379-ton Phenix had less chance than those in the American and British submarines for there were no diving bells, automatic Momsen or Davis "lungs" or even escape hatches.

Furthermore, they were trapped nearly 100 fathoms (600 feet) below the surface, a depth more than double that from which entrapped submarine crews ever have been saved.

The limit of her underwater range was only 30 hours.

Naval experts said that because of the enormous pressure at such depths, the Phenix' hull might have been crushed. If the submersible was flooded, however, the pressure from outside would be somewhat equalized. The Squalus sunk at 240 feet and the Thetis at 130 feet.

No Trace as Dark Falls

When darkness descended on the China Sea tonight searching seaplanes returned to their bases and reported they had found no trace of the Phenix.

French warships continued to search a widespread area, however, dragging and making soundings in belief that the strong currents of the China Sea might carry the Phenix farther out.

When the Phenix went down Wednesday she signaled an attending flagship that she would remain below only a half hour. A group of warships maneuvered at the time within a radius of five miles.

When the submarine failed to reappear after an hour commanders of the warships began signaling by telephone apparatus. No answer came and the signals became frantic. There were no spots of oil to provide a clew to the grave of the submarine.

The Bay of Cam Ranh is the Far East base where France is rushing defense preparations.

The Phenix had been at the Mediterranean naval base of Toulon since entering service in 1932 and was transferred to Indo-China in April to reinforce the Far Eastern French fleet, defending the new Cam Ranh base against foreign

McNutt Gave Secret Data, Buckner Says

Former Sen. Hawes, Police Official Are Mentioned in Letters

Special Dispatch to The Post

Neww York, June 16.—William P. Buckner, jr., 31-year-old playboy, who became chairman of the Philippine Railway Co. bondholders' committee in 1937 when the bonds were in default, was pictured in United States District Court today as a serious lobbyist who took his cause directly to Paul V. McNutt, United States High Commissioner to the Philippines, Senator Walsh, of Massachusetts, and others who might have furthered redemption of the issue.

The manner of his operations was reflected in a letter which he sent to the committee in December, 1937, when he was in Manila. In it he wrote "Your chairman was able, through the courtesy of his excellency, Paul McNutt, the High Commissioner to the Philippines, to obtain access to various confidential reports of the United States Army relating to personalities of certain Philippine officials, as well as a study of the general Philippine psychology."

As further evidence of Buckner's ability to crash official circles in quest of aid for bondholders—who,

2 Nazis Drank $18 Worth Before Czech Slaying, Testimony

Prague, June 16 (AP).—A special Nazi tribunal tonight worked toward swift conclusion of the trial of two German policemen, George Bulla and Paul Stehr, charged with killing a Czech policeman at Nachod a week ago.

A verdict was expected tomorrow after only one day of hearings. No appeal from the tribunal's verdict is possible.

Three barmaids testified the German policeman drank 47 marks worth ($18.80) of beer, wine and cognac in a Nachod bar the night of the killing and later went through the streets shooting into the air.

Henry Ford Chats With Fair Crowd

New York, June 16 (AP).—With the same aplomb with which he has avoided the public eye for years, Multimillionaire Henry Ford stepped out in a 100-degree sun today at the New York World's Fair to chat with people he had never seen before, sign autographs for all comers, and watch the 27,000,000th Ford arrive from the San Francisco Fair.

Hundreds of fair visitors broke through police lines and swarmed around them, as the 75-year-old manufacturer strolled with Mrs. Ford and their son, Edsel, into the open cement courtyard of the Ford exhibit.

Britain Warns Tokyo Of 'Immediate Steps'

Indicates Serious Situation Will Arise Unless Demands for Lifting Blockade Are Modified; Hand of Axis Seen

Special Cable to The Post.

London, June 16.—The British government in a semi-official statement issued today warned Tokyo that if the revised and inflated Japanese demand for the raising of the blockade of the British and French concessions at Tientsin are persisted in "an extremely serious situation will arise."

In such a case, it was added, "the British government will have to consider what immediate and active steps they can take for the protection of British interests in China." Though it has been disclosed that the British Board of Trade has been working out measures of economic retaliation against Japan, to be applied if necessary, up to a late hour tonight no official indication has been given as to the details of the reprisal proposed.

Take Serious View

In view of the declaration by the local Japanese authorities at Tientsin that the new price for the raising of the blockade was "co-operation" of Britain with Japan "in the construction of a new order in the East," London is faced with the grim probability that the Tientsin crisis is only a preliminary incident in a final campaign by Japan to dislodge Britain's foothold in China.

Making clear this country's desire to point out to the United States and France that their own long-term interests in China were also directly involved, tonight's semi-official statement said:

"British circles cannot but take a most serious view of the further demands which have been made and which raise the widest issues affecting the rights of all those powers which have trade treaty rights in China. They would mean the abandonment under threats of force of the policy which His Majesty's government has followed in the past, which is the same as that of other great powers with interests in the Far East."

Government Cracks Down On Floating Monte Carlos

By Alfred Friendly

Uncle Sam, who catches gangsters by the income-tax laws and fosters group medical care by the antitrust laws, is cracking down on gamblers through the safety-at-sea laws.

The cracking down, which was considered yesterday at a conference between Commerce, Justice and Coast Guard officials, is aimed against alleged violations of four or five palatial gaming ships anchored off the California coast near Los Angeles.

The ships, reconditioned fishing vessels, have been operating almost every form of gambling game for several years. Just outside the three-mile limit, they are beyond the purview of California gaming laws. A motor boat "taxi service" ferries as many as 1,900 customers to one of the boats each night, Commerce officials reported.

Although the ships are without motors and are anchored, the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation has taken the position that they are passenger vessels which move with the tide and are subject to laws governing American craft.

The bureau, therefore, is insisting that each employe carry a sea-going license issued by marine commissioners, and carry the required complement of licensed officers.

Col. Peak, D. C. Reformatory Head, Killed as Car Hits Truck

Col. William L. Peak, superintendent of the District Reformatory, was killed instantly last night when the automobile he was driving crashed into the rear of a parked gasoline truck in United States Highway No. 1 near Fort Belvoir, Va.

Virginia State Trooper James Clark, Peak's son-in-law, summoned at once, was the first police officer to reach the scene. Col. Peak's body was taken to Alexandria Hospital.

Virginia State police said the reformatory superintendent was driving south. They were unable to reconstruct the accident immediately. The truck, they said, was protected by lighted torches on the highway.

There was no fire. The front of Col. Peak's automobile was demolished. Police said the truck appeared to have been unoccupied when the crash occurred.

Col. Peak was appointed superintendent of the reformatory at Lorton August 29, 1933, by the District Commissioners. At that time he was warden of the District jail, a post he had held since 1919. From 1908 until 1917, when he resigned to enter the World War, he had served at the Federal Penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kans.

Economy Bloc Lauds Murphy On Job Cutting

He Is Right, Says Byrd; Glass Calls Assertion On Saving 'Significant'

By the Associated Press.

Attorney General Murphy's suggestion that Government pay rolls—Federal State and local—should be trimmed by a billion dollars was heartily applauded yesterday by members of the Congressional "economy bloc."

Contending that was just what they had been endeavoring to make a start on, they said they welcomed the Attorney General's help.

Senator Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, long-time advocate of reduced Federal spendin issued a statement saying it was "significant" that Murphy should "take issue with President Roosevelt."

The Attorney General did this, Byrd said, by asserting that economies could be effected without disturbing those Government activities which protect the security of the people while "Mr. Roosevelt has repeatedly said that no worthwhile Federal economies were possible without eliminating such functions of government."

"This forthright declaration coming from Mr. Murphy should give new impetus to the movement to eliminate Federal extravagance as the first step toward a sound fiscal condition," said Byrd.

"Four years of study as chairman of a Senate committee to investigate Federal agencies and expenditures leads me to believe that Mr. Murphy is right. He is welcome to the ranks of economy advocates.

"When the personification of the New Deal asserts hundreds of millions of dollars can be saved to the Federal Government without causing distress his voice should be heard."

Senator Adams (Democrat), Colorado, one of those who have sought to cut this year's appropriations, observed, however, that it would be "difficult if not impossible to accomplish such a program" as Murphy advanced and still comply with the Attorney General's condition—that governmental functions not be curtailed.

Causes Quite a Stir

Murphy discussed Government costs in an address last night at Asbury Park, N. J. He asserted it was time to end the "practice of passing out Government jobs in payment of political debts," and expressed belief that 3,000,000 workers could do the job now handled by 4,000,000 on pay rolls of the Federal, State and local governments.

The attack on political jobholders created a stir throughout the Capital. At his press conference, President Roosevelt said the Administration gradually was working toward ending long-standing practices of political preferment for Government jobs.

There were some in Congress, however, who took exception to Murphy's suggestion that Federal personnel should be reduced. Senator McCarran (Democrat), Nevada, said:

"We had experience with that situation in the economy act of 1933. Had that phase of the act prevailed there would have been a general lowering of national income and disastrous results in many lines of business."

Senator Frazier (Republican), of North Dakota, said something ought to be done to reduce Government costs, but that he reviewed Murphy's statement "as propaganda to support the Administration's Governmental reorganization plan," which, he added, "has not produced any reductions as yet."

Gillette Agrees

Senator Gillette (Democrat), of Iowa, said he agreed with Murphy. "We have nearly one person out of every six now working for the Government," the Iowa Senator said. "Five persons should not be required to support one public employe."

Drawn into the discussion indirectly was the Hatch bill to restrict political activity by Federal employes and office holders, and ban politics in relief. Supporters of the measure said it would go a long way toward ending politics in government job-holding.

Senator Hatch (Democrat), New Mexico, author, said the savings which Murphy asserted could be made was a worthy objective for all governments.

Hatch's bill has passed the Senate and is pending in a House committee. House leaders have indicated it will be brought to a vote before Congress adjourns.

President Roosevelt said he approved the measure's objectives, but expressed the opinion that it had been badly drawn and added the House committee was trying to correct it.

Some critics have contended its provisions were so broad that it would prevent a Congressman, since he was a Government jobholder, from running for re-election. With a twinkle in his eye, the President said it would be a pity if the measure had this effect.

What was desired, the Chief Executive said, was language that would prevent anyone dragooning campaign funds from the 2,500,000 persons on relief.

Laurel, Md., Man Also Among 800 Who Will Be Commissioned as Ensigns July 1; New Law Affects Pensacola Graduates

Seven Washingtonians and a Laurel (Md.) man, now serving as aviation cadets with the Navy, will receive appointments as commissioned officers July 1, the Navy Department revealed yesterday.

The promotions will be extended under the terms of a recent law giving officer status to aviation cadets who have qualified as fliers. Some 800 cadets in all, on duty with operating naval air units, will be commissioned reserve ensigns the first of July, it was said.

Under the new law, graduates of the naval flying school at Pensacola, Fla., hereafter will be promoted from cadet to ensign when they win their wings, and receive advancement to lieutenant, junior grade, after three years' service.

Two of the local fliers to be promoted are attached to the Naval Air Station at Anacostia, D. C. They are Joseph R. Vensel, of 2819 R street southeast, and James O. Taylor, 1456 Clifton street northwest. Vensel is a graduate of Carnegie Tech, holding a B. S. degree in Aeronautical Engineering. Taylor was graduated from the University of Mississippi in 1931.

Both will be promoted to junior lieutenant within the next few months, as they have had nearly three years duty with the fleet.

Another flier of several years experience is Charles J. Eastman, of 319 Talbott avenue, Laurel. He attended St. Johns' College in Annapolis before being selected for training at Pensacola. His present assignment is at the fleet air base, Coco Solo, Panama Canal Zone.

Alfred D. Masters, of 3638 Cumberland street northwest, qualified as a naval aviator in 1937. Now serving aboard the aircraft carrier, Lexington, he attended Indiana State and American University.

A graduate of Syracuse University is Frederick C. Bamman, jr., of 2883 Audubon terrace. He is now serving with Patrol Squadron 18 at San Diego, Calif.

Another to be commissioned is Lyman R. McAboy, of 1709 B street southeast. McAboy, a graduate of Maryland University, also is on duty at the Naval Air Station, San Diego.

James W. Condit, of 815 Emerson street northwest, qualified as an aviator in September, 1938. He attended the University of Illinois and is attached to the aircraft carrier Yorktown.

A recent graduate of the Pensacola school is Bruce E. Moore, of 718 Rock Creek Church road. A graduate of Purdue University in 1937, he is now serving aboard the aircraft carrier Saratoga, but has orders to report to the Navy's newest carrier, the Wasp.

$25,000,000 Asked for War Stock This Year

Previous Proposal Boosted; Army Reserve Pay Changes Approved

President Roosevelt yesterday decided to seek a $25,000,000 appropriation from Congress this year to build up a war reserve of essential materials not produced in the United States.

As this decision was reached at a conference of Administration leaders, the Senate Military Affairs Committee approved legislation to pay Army Reserve officers for inactive duty training and provide them with a uniform allowance. Chairman Sheppard, in announcing the committee's action, said the bill had been amended to conform to the views of the War Department.

The figure agreed upon for the first year's increment of the strategic war reserve was much larger than had been expected. While Congress recently authorized a $100,000,000 four-year procurement plan, the President had been quoted as favoring only $10,000,000 the first year.

The materials to be bought if Congress appropriates $25,000,000 before adjournment, were decided on at yesterday's conference. The list was not revealed, but officials had previously indicated that manganese, tin, chromium, rubber, manila hemp and tungsten were to be given priority under a $10,000,000 purchase, with perhaps aluminum, quartz crystal, optical glass, and mica bought if additional funds were allowed.

Louis Johnson and Charles Edison, Assistant Secretaries of War and Navy, will decide the amounts to be spent for each class of products, it was said. Attending the meeting with the President were Secretaries Hull, Woodring and Ickes, Johnson, Admiral Leahy, Chief of Naval Operations; Acting Secretary of Commerce Edward J. Noble, and Budget Director Harold D. Smith.

Under the bill reported by the Senate committee, reserve officers who maintain their eligibility for active duty would be paid $50 a year to compensate them for taking correspondence courses, attending lectures, etc.

In addition, the bill provides a uniform allowance of $50 a year for the first three years' of service. This is just about sufficient to enable young officers to purchase their first uniform, it was said. Another provision bars officers serving more than 15 days' active duty from the inactive pay.

Reserve officers have protested that the present law discriminates against them in favor of National Guardsmen and naval and Marine Corps reservists.

Coal Board Sets Prices In District 1

Bituminous Rates Range From $1.15 to $3.35 for Region

The Coal Commission late yesterday fixed minimum prices ranging between $1.15 and $3.05 a ton at the mine for bituminous coal in price area No. 1, which produces 70 per cent of the Nation's soft coal.

Prices are subject to final hearings before becoming effective and probably will be published Tuesday.

Prices generally are lower than those of 18 months ago, which the commission withdrew in the face of court injunctions issued on the complaint by consumer groups, who claimed they were denied an adequate hearing.

The commission said the prices are calculated to yield producers in each district of the area a return as close as possible to the predetermined production cost of $2.128 a ton.

However, quotations for various types of coal reflect relative values as to kind, grade, size and other factors whose consideration is required by law.

The area involved includes the giant Appalachian field, which extends through Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio, Kentucky, Virginia, Tennessee, Maryland and Alabama. The area produced 311,488,000 of the total 442,455,780 tons mined in 1937.

Schedules selected at random from commission work sheets showed prices for high volatile coals consumed by industry to average 20 cents a ton higher than prevailing open-market prices.

Prices for lump coals used for domestic and house heating, however, showed substantial reductions over prevailing quotations for winter delivery in Eastern markets.

Prices on West Virginia smokeless coal are up 20 cents. Highest-grade Pocohontas was fixed at $3.30 for winter delivery at Detroit, ranging downward to $2.80 for summer delivery and storage.

The commission now is developing price schedules for areas No. 2 to 5, covering mines in the Central, Southern, Midwestern and Southwestern States. Prices for the Rocky Mountain and Pacific regions have been published, but not declared finally effective.

Actuary Admits 20 Life Firms Traded Rates

'No Concealment' About Meetings and Program Of Uniformity, He Says

By the Associated Press.

The Federal Monopoly Committee heard yesterday that actuaries of more than 20 of the Nation's largest insurance companies held frequent meetings for the purpose of arriving at uniform rates for annuity contracts.

Arthur Hunter, chief actuary for the New York Life Insurance Co., testified he usually presided at the meetings, in the New York Life offices, and served as a "clearing house" for exchanging information on annuity contract experience.

Hunter told the committee that, although an entirely uniform premium rate program did not result from the meetings, their purpose was primarily to bring about "greater and greater uniformity."

Small Companies Held Back

Committee counsel put in the record a memorandum from the files of the Travelers Insurance Co. describing a meeting on May 19, 1933, at which an increased schedule of premium rates was discussed by actuaries of 22 companies.

"After much discussion," the memorandum said, "18 companies voted for the . . . uniform program."

"After the meeting the general feeling was that if some missionary work were done on the Connecticut Mutual, Phoenix Mutual and New England Mutual, practically all important companies, with the possible exception of the Provident Mutual, would go along on the proposed program . . .

"Throughout the conference it was apparent that the larger companies were quite willing to make changes for the good of their companies and the business in general. The opposition was generally found in the smaller, self-sufficient, participating companies.

Meetings Began in 1934

"If these concerns could be brought to a better appreciation of the current situation, the present is a wonderfully fine opportunity for clearing up many of the present troubles of the life insurance business."

The witness said the meetings originated with an exchange of mortality experience between the five largest companies in 1933 at suggestion of the New York insurance commissioner.

He testified that in 1934 declining interest rates brought on new negotiations for an increase in premium rates.

Five leading companies, New York Life, Metropolitan, Prudential, Mutual Life and Equitable Life Assurance Society, met on March 23 of that year and, he said, worked out a schedule they believed should be adopted.

Hunter said he then invited 14 other companies to a meeting to discuss the proposal. The schedule was not adopted, he testified.

Denies "Concealment"

Hunter asserted there was "no concealment about these meetings" but that there were "certain things we wouldn't want broadcast."

"If we intend to get out a set of annuity rates in which there was to be an increase," he explained, "it is undesirable to have our field force know about it because then we would have immediately a larger volume of business than we wanted."

"Then the principal purpose was to reach a uniform program of increased rates," suggested the committee's counsel.

"Yes, I think that's a fair statement," the witness replied.

Agents' commissions also were worked out on a uniform basis, Hunter told the committee.

Roosevelt Asks Envoy's Aid in Speeding Up Settlement of Mexican Oil Seizure Claims

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt has sought the aid of Francisco Najera, the Mexican Ambassador to Washington, to speed up negotiations between the United States and Mexico for settlement of claims arising from Mexico's expropriation of American oil properties.

NAJERA

The President told a press conference yesterday that such an interpretation of his meeting with the Ambassador Thursday was substantially correct. He did not elaborate.

Ten years after the size of paper money was reduced one-third, Treasury officials estimated yesterday that $18,000,000 has been saved by the curtailment.

In the decade, 9,339,917,177 bills have been printed in denominations ranging from $1 to $100,000. The $100,000 ones are kept in a museum.

The smaller bills, officials said, cost just under a penny each, regardless of denomination. A saving of paper, ink, labor and storage space amounts to nearly $2 per thousand bills.

There are about 960,000,000 bills worth $6,357,000,000 in circulation outside the Treasury and Federal Reserve banks.

However, someone has a lot of those old oversized bills in hiding. A total of 10,775,173 of them never has been accounted for.

A proposal by some Midwestern Senator to curb future trading in major farm products by increasing margin requirements drew opposition yesterday from the Agriculture Department.

Department officials informed the Senate Agriculture Committee by letter that it would be costly and nearly impossible to enforce proposed amendments to the commodity exchange act.

Senator Gillette (Democrat), Iowa, asked that margins be fixed at 25 per cent of the value of the farm commodity a year earlier.

Gillette and Senators Capper (Republican), Kansas, and Frazier (Republican), North Dakota, testified at a sub-committee hearing yesterday that "gamblers and speculators" were chief beneficiaries of the present marketing system, at the expense of the farmer and producer.

Congressional authorization for an investigation of the possibility of establishing "postalized" passenger rates on the railroads was urged before a Senate Interstate Commerce sub-committee by John A. Hastings, former New York State Senator.

Hastings testified a uniform system of passenger rates, involving low charges not based on the mileage traveled, would increase the traffic of the railroads, assure higher wages to employes and promote general industrial recovery. Under his plan, he explained, the rate for one passenger, on coaches, from New York to Los Angeles might be $12.50.

Educators Shift Parley to New York

Transfer of the biennial conference of the World Federation of Educational Associations from Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, to New York was announced yesterday by the National Education Association.

A spokesman, Miss Selma M. Borchardt, of Washington, said that the Brazilian government had asked for postponement of the conference because certain educational projects there had not been completed and because of the international political situation.

The educators, however, will make a good-will tour August 6-11, at the invitation of the Brazilian government.

Samuel Slabley, of Richmond, was chosen president of the Virginia State Aerie, Fraternal Order of Eagles, at the closing session yesterday of the thirty-fourth annual State convention. He succeeds Thomas F. Gray, of Norfolk, who presided over the sessions.

Judge W. Terrell Sheehan, of Staunton, was elected vice president; John A. Hayden, of Portsmouth, chaplain; James O. Jones, Alexandria, conductor; Charles Stadelmeyer, South Richmond, inside guard; Adam Mabon, Petersburg, outside guard; Edward I. Young, Alexandria, secretary; G. L. Layne, South Richmond, treasurer, and Ralph Bethel, Richmond, trustee.

The new officers were installed at a late afternoon session, past presidents conducting the ceremonies. The convention city for 1940 will be selected by the executive board of the order.

Reports submitted at the morning session included those of the committees on finance, judiciary, grievance and appeals, old-age pensions, State trustee, and good of the order. The organization was shown to be in sound financial condition. A committee was appointed to look into old-age pension laws in Virginia, with money appropriated for its functioning.

The convention adopted a resolution favoring an amendment to the alcoholic beverage control law, under which, in case of suspension or revocation of liquor or beer licenses there would be an absolute right of appeal to the Corporation or circuit court, with right to a trial by jury. Copies of this resolution will be sent to all aeries in the State with the request that local legislators be contacted.

Park Policeman G. R. Shinley, of Washington, and Alexandria Policeman John L. Stewart were given a vote of thanks for acting as an escort while the visiting Eagles were on a sightseeing tour Thursday afternoon.

A dance last night at Eagles Home, 1015 Cameron street, closed the two-day meeting.

The local committee in charge of arrangements was Harry C. Spear, Robert S. Lawhorne, Henry C. Moore, James T. Luckett, jr., John H. Chappelle, Edward I. Young, Charles Martin, Charles L. Nowland, Edward A. Downey, Lewis L. Lyles, John A. Hayden and Ellsworth Nightengale.

Rabies Vaccine On Pullman: Dr. McCormick's?

Just possibly it was Dr. Hugh McCormick's, Grand Rapids, Mich., veterinarian. But, in any event, J. W. Moseman, a Pennsylvania Railroad dining car steward, put two and two together when a passenger asked him to keep a package of rabies vaccine in the dining car refrigerator.

Dr. McCormick, Washington police said Thursday, had left his home on a motor trip to the World's Fair in New York. After he left, a dog he had handled in his animal hospital died with the rabies. Police sought the veterinarian widely to notify him of his peril.

Moseman told The Post last night, a man got on his car in Chicago and requested him to place a small package, labeled "rabies vaccine," in the refrigerator. Moseman was told that the man had been subjected to the dread disease.

Maybe, said Moseman, this was Dr. McCormick. But he didn't ask the man his name, or think anything about it until he had seen the press reports of the search for McCormick. Moseman described the passenger as between 35 and 40 years old, and about 5 feet 7 inches tall. He said he was "a very pleasant man." He left the train in Washington.

Foundry Church To Mark Original Site With Plaque

When British forces captured Washington in 1814, a party was sent to destroy the Columbian foundry and munition works in Georgetown, established in 1801 at the initiative of Thomas Jefferson by Henry Foxall, whose cannon had helped Commodore Perry win the Lake Erie naval victory.

Foxall, a Methodist preacher, vowed that "if God would stay the hand of the enemy," he would establish another Methodist Church in addition to three which he had already sponsored for local Methodists.

So when a terrific storm halted the British raid, Foxall donated a site and erected at what is now Fourteenth and G streets northwest a brick structure.

Tomorrow at 5 p. m. Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes, acting for Foundry Methodist Church, now one of the largest in the city, will speak at a commemorative service and unveil a plaque on the site of the Foundry Church of 1815. Dr. Frederick Brown Harris, now Foundry pastor, also will speak and Justin Lawrie's Foundry Singers will present music for the dedication.

Chestnuts Ruin Bass Fishing In Fairfax

Much Equipment Reported Lost in Water Weeds

FAIRFAX BUREAU OF THE POST,
P. O. BOX 245, Fairfax, Va.
Phone Falls Church 2048-M.

Bass fishing season opened in Fairfax County this week but anglers casting in the Potomac below Alexandria are experiencing very poor luck, not from any lack of fish but because of the Japanese water chestnut.

Gunston Cove, in the lower section of the county, has always been one of the best bass fishing spots on the Potomac and fishermen from Washington and northern Virginia flocked there to try their skill against the gamesters. This year fouled lines are causing much complaint and many dollars worth of expensive lures have been left among the chestnut roots.

For several years the growth of the water chestnut along the Potomac below Washington has spread unchecked despite protests of fishermen. Already many acres of fishing grounds are covered by the plant between Washington and Alexandria. An attempt has been made to have the Federal Government start a fight against the weeds to preserve local fishing and boating grounds. Motor boats cannot navigate among them because of fouling the propeller.

Fishermen express hope that the fall season may prove better than the summer months as the chestnut dies out, but until then they say to enjoy casting they will have to seek other streams.

The chestnut plant, which covers the shallow waters, bears a triangular burr with a sharp spike on each corner. It not only proves a hazard to fishermen but bathers avoid beaches where they are cast up by the water.

With Arlington County's building operations continuing to exceed all of the 3,000 counties in the United States, its largest single home development, which will be known as Westmont, at Glebe road and Columbia pike, representing an outlay in excess of $900,000 is rapidly nearing completion, according to M. A. Mace, president of the Mace Properties, Inc. developers.

The project includes 198 homes all of steel, concrete and brick construction.

The company maintains its own corps of architects headed by A. F. Thelander, vice president of the corporation.

With this development well under way, it is announced that plans and specifications are complete for another development located on North Washington boulevard about 1 mile beyond Glebe road.

Applications for permits to start construction will be requested within the next ten days for the first unit of 150 apartments to cost $600,000.

This development, adjacent to the new junior high school, will be known as "Westover."

Tension Grows, Food Declines At Tientsin

Japanese Urging Chinese to Back Demands on British

By the Associated Press.

Tientsin (Saturday), June 17.—The Japanese blockade of the British and French concessions entered the fourth day today with Japanese urging Chinese to bring independent pressure on the British to bow to Japanese demands and the British pressing representations against obstacles to the flow of foodstuffs.

(The British foreign office warned in a communique that if "the new demands foreshadowed from official Japanese sources in north China should be persisted in. then it must be said at once that an extremely serious situation will arise and that the British government will have to consider what immediate and active steps they can take for the protection of British interests in China.")

Food Prices Skyrocketing

Food prices were skyrocketing; the shortage of milk for children was causing sharp resentment among foreigners, and two Chinese were reported killed yesterday morning by Japanese sentries while handing up a basket of vegetables into the British concession near the United States Marine barracks.

[British authorities today mustered 1,000 soldiers and civilian volunteers "for any emergency" after appealing to British warships to run the gantlet of Japanese batteries along the Hai River with food for the British and French concessions, according to the United Press.—Editor's note.]

An illuminated captive balloon hoisted by the Japanese military swung lazily in the sky with a huge placard urging the Chinese to demand that the British "change their attitude."

Other developments included:

The Japanese military announced cancellation of plans for a parade today in the British concession to graves of Japanese killed in the Boxer rising of 1900.

Eric Mayell, British cameraman for Fox Movietone News, was released by the Japanese military who had held him prisoner since Wednesday for taking pictures of the Japanese near the blockaded concessions.

Tension had lessened somewhat, but the Japanese continued to search persons entering or leaving the concessions.

400 Americans Affected

[The 400 American residents of the blockaded concessions felt the grip of Japan's military blockade and the United States consulate general protested to Japanese authorities against the treatment given to a China-born United States citizen, Robert E. McCann, who was the first American to be subjected to search by Japanese sentries at the barricades, the United Press said.

[McCann, halted and searched by the sentries at the Woodrow Wilson barrier on Thursday, obtained a Japanese apology after lodging his protest with the United States consulate general. The Japanese, explaining that it was a mistake, later treated McCann with extreme politeness when he passed through the barriers.—Editor's note.]

Japanese informants have widened original conditions for possible settlement of the dispute to include punishment by the British of "terrorists," strict control of anti-Japanese organizations, cessation of "economic disturbances" in North China, and delivery of 50,000,000 Chinese dollars (about $6,000,000) deposited in the concession by the Chinese nationalist government.

(In Tokyo, authoritative sources said Japan's terms were unconditional surrender by the British of all issues involved.

(These were said to include reorganization of the concession government to give greater authority to the Japanese-sponsored Tientsin government, financial "co-operation" by British banks to facilitate circulation of Japenese currency and "sweeping pledges of future co-operation with Japanese authorities."

(The Japanese cabinet met and Domei, Japanese news agency, said it approved fully the stand taken by the army authorities at Tientsin. Eugene Dooman, American Charge d'Affaires, discussed the controvery with Seijiro Yoshizawa, head of the American section of the foreign office, in what government circles said they believed might be a preliminary step toward mediation efforts by the United States.)

British Make Representations

British authorities were pressing representations to the Japanese against the latter's military allegedly prohibiting foodstuffs from entering the British concession while a fair supply was permitted to enter the French area.

British charged that a Japanese patrol boat in the Hai River below the British zone prevented scores of Chinese craft laden with food from approaching the concession but did allow a number to reach the French area.

(Japanese dispatches from Tientsin to Tokyo said British authorities had ordered two naval vessels to sail, one from Chinwangtao, 200 miles away, and Weihaiwei, 300 miles away, with full loads of food for the blockaded area.

sul general intended to have the sul-general intended to have the food brought in as military supplies and then distribute it among the concession residents.)

Tension at Hankow

Shanghai (Saturday), June 17 (AP). Another clash between Japanese and foreign interests in China threatened today at Hankow over refusal of members of the Foreign Chamber of Commerce to pay new taxes imposed by the recently organized Japanese-controlled Wuhan special municipality.

U. S. Cracks Down On Gaming Ships

This means, it is believed, that roulette table croupiers can be required to carry marine certificates and that the boats—actually permanently moored, engineless barges—must employ expert navigators and marine engineers.

Following yesterday's conference, attended by Commerce Department Solicitor South Trimble, jr., Assistant to the Attorney General Alexander Holtzoff and Lieut. Polio, of the Coast Guard, it was disclosed that the gaming ships are contesting the interpretation and one is now fighting a $26,000 fine imposed for carrying several hundred non-licensed personnel.

Plan Gambling Laws

It was also learned that legislation will be drafted for presentation to Congress patterned after the District gambling law, which will make illegal the operation of a gambling house on the high seas. At present there are no Federal antigaming laws applicable. It is believed, however, that one or more of the boats, although anchored 3 miles or more from land, may actually be within territorial waters, which do not follow the 3-mile limit in all cases, but are delimited by the Secretary of Commerce.

Maritime officials insist that they have no interest in suppressing gambling, but declared that 1,000 to 3,000 customers aboard the ships each night are entitled to the same protection as sea-going passengers, and that experienced officers and sailors would be necessary in case of fire or other emergency.

According to Los Angeles reports, the weekly net "take" of one ship alone is $75,000. More than 350 men man its casino, dance and restaurant departments. Daily pay roll totals $4,500. Advertising methods include full-page spreads in Los Angeles papers and daily flights of a smoke-writing airplane.

Hope Lost for 63 On Submarine

menaces during its fortification and enlargement.

A ministry of marine communique, explaining that the families of the 45 men had been notified of the disaster, declared:

"Great anxiety prevails regarding the fate of the first-class submarine Phenix, detached to service in Indo-China. After diving during practice on the morning of June 15 off the Bay of Cam Ranh the submarine failed to appear.

Sister Ship Sank in 1932

"The Far Eastern naval forces and ships detached to the navy in Indo-China immediately hunted and the search continues with the participation of seaplanes. Immediately informed, the ministry of navy has advised the families of the situation."

The Phenix, belonging to France's best class of submarines, suffered a fate similar to that of her sister craft the Promethee, which sank off Cherbourg on July 8, 1932, during trials, with a loss of 63 men.

The only other French submarine disaster since the World War was the sinking of the Ondine off Portugal October 3, 1928, when it collided with a Greek steamer.

Censorship Invoked

Immediately after word reached Paris of the Phenix disaster the government clamped down a rigid censorship, applying to the outgoing cables of all foreign newspaper correspondents, and it was some time before news of the tragedy reached the outside world.

Only a day ago the navy ministry ordered a speed-up of the Cam Ranh fortification because of Anglo-French-Japanese tension and the doubling of the size of the Saigon port to accomodate a formidable battle fleet.

According to present plans, the Cam Ranh base will be one of the five best naval bases in the world. Called "the balcony of the Pacific," it ranks already as one of the most strategic points in Eastern waters with fortified mountains protecting it on the land side.

during the Russian-Japanese war of 1904-05 Russian warships maneuvered there.

Lebrun Cancels Banquet

When it became established that the submarine was lost, the marine ministry issued an announcement shortly before 7:30 p. m. (2:30 p. m. Eastern standard time), asking that newspapers refrain from publishing the news before 10 p. m. in order that the families of the doomed men could be notified first.

President Lebrun, informed of the disaster, canceled a banquet scheduled for tonight in honor of the Sultan of Morocco at Elysee Palace.

A diving bell, such as was used to rescue 33 of the 59 men aboard the Squalus, is maintained by the United States Navy in the Philippines. But the distance—more than 400 miles—made it impracticable to send the device from Manila to Saigon in time to be of value.

Only 48 hours ago French Navy Minister Cesar Campinchi announced before the Chamber of Deputies naval commission that the government had entered into negotiation with the United States Government for the purchase of four of the United States diving bells which brought 33 men of the Squalus' crew to safety.

Admiralty Attacked

Campinchi's statement was made after bitter attacks in England against the British admiralty for its failure to be supplied with diving bells, which might have saved more than the four men rescued from the Thetis, in view of the fact that the United States had offered specifications of the diving bell to all naval powers.

In London a spokesman for the admiralty said it was unlikely that any British rescue vessels were in the vicinity of the sunken Phenix although he assumed that "standard rescue equipment" was available in the British naval bases at Singapore and Hongkong.

In view of the difficulty encountered in attempting to raise the Thetis the British naval authorities doubted that anything could be done for the Phenix.

Built in 1930

The Phenix was built in April, 1930, at the Charles Dubigeon yards at Nantes. She is of the redoubtable class, 302 feet long and carrying two sets of 8,400 horsepower Diesel engines with a speed of 18 knots. She carried two 2,000 horsepower motors for a speed of 10 knots submerged.

Two submarines of the same type, the Glorieux and Heros, made an unescorted round-trip voyage of 14,350 miles from Toulon to Saigon and back in 1935.

The Promethee was sunk by careless handling of the controls by an inexperienced crew, who opened the submerging compartments before all the hatches were closed. The seven who were rescued had been standing on the decks and were swept overboard.

G.O.P. Condemns Neutrality Bill

to an "uncompromising fight" against repeal of the present mandatory arms embargo The Bloom bill, reported to the House favorably by the Foreign Affairs Committee's Democratic majority, would repeal the embargo.

The minority report on the House measure bore the names of Representatives Hamilton Fish, New York; Charles A. Eaton, New Jersey; George H. Tinkham, Massachusetts; Edith Nourse Rogers, Massachusetts; Robert B. Chiperfield, Illinois; Robert J. Corbett, Pennsylvania; John M. Vorys, Ohio; Foster Stearns, New Hampshire, and Andrew Schiffler, West Virginia.

Representative Barton, New York, tenth Republican members of the group, declined to sign. He voted "present" when the committee earlier this week reported the Bloom bill.

"Denies Sales to Other Side"

The report was particularly critical of a clause in the bill which would empower the President to make certain exceptions to another provision which bans loans or credits to warring nations. This, the minority said, would authorize the President to permit sale of arms on "ordinary commercial credit to one side, and deny such sales to the other side."

The report called attention to the failure of the full committee to act on measures designed to curb Japanese activities in China

"We feel that it is a mistake to try to determine our possible conduct as to future wars in Europe before we determine our conduct as to an existing war," it said.

"We have let our excitement about what may happen to our remote interests in Europe blind us as to what is now happening to our immediate interests in the Pacific, where our treaty rights are being violated and our national interests threatened every day."

"Arsenal of the World?"

It also recalled the attitude of State Department officials that because of a virtual German monopoly on European munitions factory, so far as smaller nations are concerned, the United States should permit the unrestricted sale of arms and armament to the Balkan and other states who do not care to deal with the Nazis in this matter

The minority asked whether the United States was to replace the Nazi-seized munitions plants in Czecho-Slovakia and Austria in "the arming of Europe?"

"Are we to become the arsenal of the world?" it asked.

The Senate isolation group met in the office of Senator Gerald P. Nye (Republican), North Dakota, leader of the mandatory neutrality bloc, shortly after the President expressed the hope to Senator Pepper (Democrat), Florida, that Congress would act on neutrality before adjournment.

Nye's colleagues, composed of veteran isolationists such as Senators Borah (Republican), of Idaho; Johnson (Republican), of California, and Walsh (Democrat), of Massachusetts, refused to say whether they would filibuster if the Administration presses its demands, but such tactics are believed inevitable.

The North Dakotan has said repeatedly that he will lead an assault on any attempt to remove the mandatory features of the present neutrality law, especially as applying to the arms embargo section which Mr. Roosevelt and Secretary of State Hull want placed on a discretionary basis.

Others meeting with Nye were Senators Clark (Democrat), of Missouri; Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan; McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada; La Follette (Progressive), of Wisconsin; Capper (Republican), of Kansas; Frazier (Republican), of North Dakota; Clark (Democrat), of Idaho; McNary (Republican), of Oregon, and Bulow (Democrat), of South Dakota.

Roosevelt Says Labor Peace Is Still Possible

Peace between the C. I. O. and A. F. of L. eventually will be reached, despite John L. Lewis' statement it is impossible for the present peace committee to get together, President Roosevelt said at his press conference yesterday.

President Roosevelt personally launched the labor peace conference March 7. The meetings failed to open a road to peace. An indefinite recess was taken April 4.

Though leaders in the labor world were gloomy over the outlook for peace, the President said he personally did not share that pessimism. He predicted peace would be worked out in spite of Lewis' stand.

GUNTHER'S POPULARITY SOARS AS BEER DRINKERS CHECK WITH EXPERTS

THIS GUNTHER'S TALKS MY LANGUAGE: IT'S "SPECIAL DRY LAGER" .. AND THE ONLY ONE MADE AROUND HERE!
OUR BUNCH IS A CROWD OF REAL BEER DRINKERS AND BEING GUNTHER FANS WE WEREN'T SURPRISED TO LEARN THAT IT RANKED WITH THE WORLDS MOST FAMOUS IMPORTED BEERS!
THAT'S THE FIRST GLASS OF REAL BEER I'VE HAD SINCE I'VE BEEN IN THIS COUNTRY!
NOW IT'S A STANDING ORDER AT OUR HOUSE "A HALF A DOZEN GUNTHER'S IN THE ICE BOX ALL THE TIME!"
GUNTHER'S IS SO DRY..AND IT'S NEVER HEAVY! IT DOESN'T SEEM TO FILL YOU UP!
Gunther's Dry Beer

37 INTERNATIONAL EXPERTS AGREE GUNTHER'S EQUALS EUROPE'S BEST BEER

● The swing is to Gunther's! Every day people by the thousands are learning that the world famous dry, beer-y beer taste real beer drinkers prefer, costs no more than ordinary "sweet" type beers. And Gunther sales are shooting sky-high!

Experts Agree

And this has been confirmed by the findings and expert opinions of dozens of International Beer Experts! They rank Gunther's above many of Europe's most famous beers. They preferred Gunther's smooth, dry beer-i-ness!

How Can Gunther's Do It?

How can Gunther's offer such high quality beer at the price of regular beers? There are three big reasons: 1. Gunther's makes hundreds of thousands of BARRELS of beer (the equivalent of over 90 MILLION bottles) . . . more than any other beer in this part of the country! This big volume means big savings on ingredient and brewing costs. 2. Most all of Gunther's is sold to folks right here in Maryland and D. C. . . . this means that no long haul shipping charges are added to the cost of Gunther's. 3. Most of it is delivered direct from the brewery to your dealer in our own trucks . . . another enormous saving, because breweries from other states have to pay as much as 30 to 50¢ per case to the wholesalers who handle their beer.

Put all these big savings together and you can see why folks around here can have Gunther's quality at a dime, whereas if you lived in New York, Milwaukee, St. Louis, etc., you would have to pay at least 15¢ per bottle for it.

Try Gunther's today. It is the only "Special Dry Lager" sold around here.

Wallace Gives Farm Pointers To 4-H Campers

172 Sun-Tanned Boys And Girls Call on President, See Nats Play

By Scott Hart

Secretary Wallace faced 172 sun-tanned, practical farmers and farm girls yesterday when he addressed the 4-H Club campers.

In the aggregate they were a hand-picked group, brought here to see the latest and hear of the newest trends in agriculture. Individually they were the likes of:

Jessie Guard, 20, of Garrett County, Md., who, with her sister, Mary, carries on all the work in the home—a home with seven children. She has been in 4-H Club work three years and now is president of the County Youth Club.

And George Lechlider, of Montgomery County, Md., who has been in club work since 1931 with such projects as poultry, hogs, baby beef, sheep and soil conservation. He was president of his club three years. He now has ten pure-bred pigs, a Hampshire boar, two baby beeves and ten wild ducks.

And Pauline Hudson, 17, of Amherst County, Va., is a girl who does most of her home canning. She keeps the farm records and has served in all the offices of her club. Down her way, she has given demonstrations in parliamentary procedure, correct posture, canning and clothing work.

And Mary Jane Nichols, 20, of Ohio County, W. Va., who is rounding out her ninth year in club work. She has represented her club in a number of the dress revues and has served in all its offices.

The Secretary of Agriculture asked the boys and girls to put this in their notebook: The Nation's soil resources should be improved and agricultural production made more efficient; farmers should learn to co-operate more effectively among themselves and with other economic groups, and should use their advantages to develop a rural culture.

America's agricultural products should be raised as nearly as possible on family-sized farms operated by owners or long-time renters. Farmers, he said, should receive a fair share of the national income and also do justice to city consumers by using governmental aid to stabilize supplies and prices of their products.

After the talks the campers, with a minimum of confusion, piled into motor buses and went to the ball game as the guests of Clark Griffith. Earlier, they visited the White House, where a delegation presented the President with a gavel made of wood from the White House and from Washington's home at Mount Vernon.

President Backs Wider Tax Base

lette (Progressive), of Wisconsin, annually has offered a similar plan as an amendment to every major tax bill. La Follette never previously has had Administration support. Recently the Wisconsin Senator indicated he was undecided whether or not to press the amendment on the pending corporate tax bill.

First reports that President Roosevelt was advocating broadening of the income tax base followed trips to the White House of a few small groups of Congressmen seeking his attitude toward the Senate's $338,000,000 addition to the farm bill for farm parity payments and farm surplus removal.

The President then was said to have reiterated his position that taxes should be provided to finance the new farm parity payments and to have suggested lowering of income tax exemptions as one means of raising new revenue.

At yesterday's press conference, the President approached the subject cautiously. He said thet rates in the middle brackets (between $10,000 and $50,000) should be raised a little. He said the income tax base should be expanded a little bit.

Favored Morgenthau Plan

He went so far in discouraging any hope of great revenue from this source as to refer with some sarcasm to what he called the rot of a lot of silly editorials representing that the whole deficit could be wiped out all at once by this method.

He referred to arguments that lowering of single exemptions to $800 and married exemptions to $1,200 would permit the Government to pay off the national debt as political. On the contrary, he said the change would not produce so very much revenue as returns from collections in the very low brackets would virtually offset the cost of Administration and collection.

Last week, in another suggested revenue change, the President favored the so-called "double-barreled" proposal of Secretary Morgenthau to couple proposed removal of exemptions from public securities with some reductions in the highest surtax brackets.

Arms Tax Permanent

The House Ways and Means Committee meanwhile voted to report the new corporate tax bill completed early this week by a tax subcommittee, repealing the undivided profits tax, substituting an 18 per cent flat corporate tax on companies earning more than $25,000, and continuing the present graduated 12½ to 16 per cent scale on companies earning less than $25,000.

Coupled with other business tax modification, and extension of the $500,000,000 in expiring nuisance levies, the bill will be called up for passage in the House on Monday, and will be considered immediately thereafter by the Senate Finance Committee.

Last-minute changes approved before the committee reported the bill:

Would extend to individuals and partnerships the two-year carry-over of operating losses already approved for corporations.

Extend to corporations in financial distress the right to buy in interest-bearing obligations at less than par to notes, debentures and certificates of indebtedness as well as bonds. The difference between face value and the amount paid by the company would not be subject to tax.

Made permanent the 10 per cent tax on the retail sales of sporting firearms, shells and cartridges, returns to be used for State wild life conservation.

House Votes NYA $100,000,000

from $1,477,000 to $2,250,000,000, as askd by those organizations.

By a tally vote of 201 to 82, it voted to stand by the lower figure recommended by the Administration and the House Appropriations Committee. The decision culminated a day of hard fighting over the relief measure, which besides the sum for WPA contains appropriations for other agencies, raising the total to $1,716,000,000.

Earlier, the House had declined to strike out a provision ear-marking $125,000,000 of the WPA money for the Public Works Administration. And afterward it howled down an amendment by Representative Keller (Democrat), of Illinois, to increase the relief appropriation to $2,574,000,000. The votes were taken amid such bitter feeling that at one point Keller thumbed his nose at jeering Republicans.

Before the debate, the sub-committee in charge of the bill met in extraordinary session to consider obviously growing opposition to many of the restrictions which the measure would impose upon the spending of money.

$25,000 Maximum Stricken

The result was described by the sub-committee members as "compromise" and by their opponents as "retreat." But in any event the committee decided to back amendments which would—

Strike out the bill's ban on projects financed wholly by the Federal Government.

Strike out a $25,000 maximum on WPA building projects and substitute a $50,000 limit on wholly Federal projects and a maximum Federal contribution of $40,000 to projects partly financed by local governments.

Permit a maximum expenditure for materials of $7 per man per month, instead of the $6 figure contained in the measure.

And, to soften opposition to the $125,000,000 allocation to PWA, require that 25 per cent of workers on PWA projects be drawn from the relief rolls.

Demands 3,000,000 Jobs

With a fiery speech, Representative Casey (Democrat), of Massachusetts, introduced the bill backed by the C. I. O. and Workers Alliance. It called for $2,250,000,000 as a substitute for the bill's $1,447,000,000 appropriation for WPA and provided a minimum WPA wage of $36 monthly.

"This bill," Casey said of the committee measure, "provides merely that we should cut WPA. My bill provides that we should strengthen the WPA. There are just as many out of work as there have been during the current fiscal year, and in the current year we appropriated enough to give WPA jobs to 3,000,000. Under this bill we cut that by one-third."

The committee measure, he asserted, was "prepared by the enemies of WPA." He pointed in the direction of Representative Taber, ranking Republican of the Appropriations Committee.

Support of Both Parties

"Who prepared your bill?" Representative Woodrum (Democrat), Virginia, in charge of the committee bill, asked, while the House roared its laughter.

"This bill," Woodrum said, "contains every dollar the Democratic President asked for. * * * I think the committee should be congratulated that we can bring a bill here supported by the Democratic leadership and at the same time by these gentlemen here."

He waved an arm in the direction of the Republican side.

"I am not a politician," he continued, as the membership laughed, "and I don't know what they (the Republicans) are going to do to chide us on relief in 1940 after they have voted for this bill today."

Two Felled Here; Mercury Hits 96

Weather Bureau officials said 30 per cent might reasonably be expected with yesterday's temperature.

After the day's record high at 4:10 p. m., the temperature fell steadily until it had reached 82 at 10:30 p. m. Weather Bureau forecasters saw little prospect for much lower temperatures before morning.

The year's previous high was 95, recorded May 31 and June 11.

Little relief from heat and humanity may be expected before tomorrow night, the weatherman predicted. The forecast for today was fair and continued warmer today and tomorrow. Showers tomorrow night may cool the torrid city, it was predicted.

Apparently the center of a "hot pocket," Washington sweltered through a day blazing with temperatures several degrees above those in cities only a few miles away.

At Baltimore, the thermometer stood four degrees below Washington's maximum. Philadelphia, New York and Boston all were cooler than the Capital. In northern New York and in New England the mercury loitered in the 60s and 70s.

Two veteran members of the Senate yesterday appeared ready to lead an exodus from Washington to cooler climes. Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia, who is 82, and 78-year-old Senator George W. Norris, of Nebraska, said they would leave soon for home if the present heat wave continues.

Thermometer Rises 24 Degrees in 15 Minutes

Milwaukee, June 16 (AP).—Frank H. Coleman, head of the Milwaukee Weather Bureau, mopped his brow this afternoon and confirmed that the temperature had jumped 24 degrees within 15 minutes. At 1:10 p. m., it was 68 on the weatherman's official instruments. Fifteen minutes later it was 92. A shift in the wind to the southwest brought the rise.

Tokyo Warned By Britain

Tokyo quoted a Japanese foreign office spokesman as saying:

"Japan's ultimate aim is the abolition of every foreign concession in China."

As indicated in the British semi-official statement, the Japanese authorities at Tientsin have demanded that the British authorities "abandon their pro-Chiang Kai-shek policies, including protection of the anti-Japanese and Communist elements, the support of Chinese dollars at a sacrifice of Federal Reserve Bank notes, the cornering of commodities, connivance in the use of the radio by lawless elements and the granting permission for the use of anti-Japanese school books."

In the view of London, as indicated in the British statement, these detailed demands had now cast into the shadow the original ground given by the Japanese for the imposition of measures against the British concession, namely, that the British authorities there had declined to turn over for trial four imprisoned Chinese alleged to have been involved in terrorist activities prejudicial to Japanese interests.

Britain Still Hopes

The statement pointed to the refusal of the Japanese to consider the British proposal for a three-man commission to examine the evidence against the four and this country's agreement in advance to abide by the decision of the commission as to whether they should be tried.

"It is still hoped," the statement concluded, "that the Japanese authorities may not maintain their refusal to give further consideration to the proposals which have been made, in order to localize the incident."

The hesitancy of the British to take immediate retaliatory action in the Tientsin crisis is believed to be due in part to growing concern over the possibility that this incident is part of a comprehensive plan worked out by the three major anti-comintern powers, under which the next step is to be a new move by one or another of the parties to the axis alliance.

Axis Link Hinted

The strategy now is well understood here under which, as soon as one of the "aggressive" state centers the attention of London and Paris by a move on the international scene, the other jump for the new booty. The thought continues here that Chancellor Hitler is about to make a further radical revision of the present setup in what was once Czecho-Slovakia. A new crisis in Europe, of course, would serve to diminish whatever pressure may have been exerted from London on Tokyo.

The London stock markets have reflected this week the renewed uneasiness as to the situation in Central Europe, as well as the Far Eastern crisis. Sagging prices and a pitiful turnover in all sections characterized this week. In an effort to explain the depression caused by the Tientsin episode, "The Financial News" writes:

"That Japan's main objective is to establish complete economic domination of China by ousting and western interests is clear."

A special cabinet session has been called for Monday for a thorough examination into the Far Eastern crisis. A final decision will be made at that time of what measures of retaliation will be taken.

D. C. Group Told Hindus Lead In Astrology

Hindu astrologists have it all over the American and European variety, Robert de Luce, of Los Angeles, Thursday night told a meeting of Washington's astrology devotees. The Indians, he said, can cast a horoscope for a child within six minutes of its birth.

De Luce recently has returned from an 18-month trip to India, where he sought records from which the Western systems of astrology were derived.

De Luce and two other nationally known astrologists, spoke at a meeting last night in the Raleigh Hotel. All are on their way to attend a convention in New York. Edward E. Doane, of Miami, Fla., spoke on "The Scientific Approach to Astrology," and Llewellyn George, of Los Angeles, spoke on "What an Astrologer Thinks of Astrology."

Harlem Angels Invade Exclusive Sutton Manor

New Rochelle, N. Y., June 16 (AP).—Dusky angels from one of Father Divine's Harlem heavens moved in among astounded and indignant residents of exclusive Sutton Manor today.

"Something will have to be done to get them out," was the first thing Corporation Counsel Aaron Simmons, of New Rochelle, said as he dug into law books looking for an ouster device.

"Give me a cigarette so I can stand the shock," said Supreme Court Justice Lee Parsons Davis, whose green lawn and big house stands just across the road.

Other nearby neighbors include Charles H. Griffiths, chairman of the Westchester County Republican committee; Robert N. Bavier yachtman and vice president of the New Rochelle Trust Company, and Butler Whiting, promient yachtsman.

Church of the Week

St. Mark's Prepares Its Golden Jubilee

Parishioners Come From All Over City To Attend Services

St. Mark's Lutheran Church, landmark at Eighth and Independence avenue southwest, near the Mall, tomorrow will set the stage for its coming golden jubilee observance.

While June 14 marks the official anniversary date, November has been deemed a more feasible time for the formal celebration, according to the Rev. J. Luther Frantz, pastor, who speaks tomorrow at 11 a. m. on "The Year of Jubilee."

Distinctive in having served two pastorates at St. Mark's—from 1902 to 1912, and 1933 until now—the pastor yesterday took occasion to praise the "splendid loyalty" of his members, practically all of whom are non-Southwestern residents who nevertheless are very faithful in attendance.

St. Mark's, which originally stood at Twelfth and C southwest and was destroyed by fire in 1904, organized one of the first Luther Leagues in the denomination over 43 years ago, with Cornelius Eckhardt, prominent in the national movement, as its first president. Miss Margaret Buckholtz now fills the executive position.

Rev. Mr. Frantz

The church's Missionary Society, led by Mrs. Lillian Kleuber, recently formed a youth auxiliary, with Miss Lottie Gebhardt as president. Mrs. Perry Leishear is president of the Ladies' Aid Society, which annually raises from $1,200 to $1,500, and which takes care of the parsonage.

Outstanding personality at St. Mark's is Austin M. Cooper, for over 25 years active layman. He joins the pastor in teaching the Brotherhood Bible Class and superintends the Sunday School.

A. M. Cooper

Henry Berkholtz serves as Brotherhood Class president, while Mrs. W. E. Miller and Mrs. C. A. Leimbach are president and teacher, respectively, of the Alpha (Women's) Class.

The Rev. Mr. Frantz has been eminently successful all during his ministerial career. While at the St. John's Lutheran Church in Knoxville, from 1912 to 1917, one of the finest structures in the South was erected there. Meyersdale (Pa.) LutheranChurch built a new Sunday School edifice during his pastorate, and in 1905 the present building rose at Eighth and (then B) Independence avenue.

MRS. MILLER

St. Mark's has sent men into the ministry—Dr. C. R. Bostsford, Deland, Fla., and the Rev. P. H. Miller, pastor at Union Bridge, Md.

Born in Salem, Va., the Rev. M. Frantz was educated at Roanoke College and Gettysburg (Pa.) Theological Seminary. He and Mrs. Frantz, who were married in 1917 during his pastorate in Knoxville, live at 222 Eighth street southwest.

Christian Science Topic

"Is the Universe, Including Man, Evolved by Atomic Force?" is the subject of the lesson-sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, tomorrow at 11 a. m. and 8 p. m. Sunday School is at 11 a. m.

The golden text is from I Corinthians 8:6: "To us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we in him."

Among the citations is the following from the Bible: "Thine, O Lord, is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the majesty: for all that is in the heaven and in the earth is thine; thine is the kingdom, O Lord, and thou art exalted as head above all." (I Chronicles 29:11).

The lesson-sermon also includes, from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures": "Being is holiness, harmony, immortality. It is already proved that a knowledge of this, even in small degree, will uplift the physical and moral standard of mortals, will increase longevity, will purify and elevate character. Thus progress will finally destroy all error, and bring immortality to light." (Page 492.)

Father to Hear Son Preach at Eldbrooke

Minister to Take It Easy While Youth Delivers Sermon

Tomorrow—Father's Day—a proud local minister will be able to step out of his pulpit and hear his son deliver a sermon in his church.

The Father

The father is Dr. Walter M. Michael, minister of Eldbrooke Methodist Church, at River road and Wisconsin avenue northwest. The son is Marion S. Michael, 22-year-old graduate of Dickinson College this year, who intends to follow in his father's footsteps and is already debating which theological seminary to enter.

Marion, one of the few sons of ministers in this area who have theological ambitions, last night said he was still undecided as to whether to go to Drew or Boston Theological Seminary, but he had his sermon all prepared for tomorrow, when he will give "An Estimate of Jesus Christ" at the evening service at Eldbrooke.

The Son

He has preached three sermons already in his father's church, at various times, and spent last summer learning the ropes at a small rural church, but tomorrow is the first time he has put on the "chip-off-the-old-block" act on a special occasion.

The Rev. Fred R. Barnes, pastor of the First Methodist Church of Piedmont, W. Va., will speak at the morning service at Eldbrooke on "They Say The Lord Shall Not See."

All Souls' Pastor To Take Part in Charmian Powwow

At All Souls' Church (Unitarian) tomorrow the minister, Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D., will preach on "The Soul's Armament" at the 11 o'clock service. The Church School will hold its final session of the year at 9:45, with a special service for all departments in Pierce Hall.

From Thursday through Sunday, June 25, the seventh Charmian Powwow for young people of high school age will take place at Monterey, Pa., on the subject, "Growing Up in a Growing World." Dr. Pierce will participate.

Universalist National Memorial. The children's day service will be held at 11 a. m. Children will help with ushering and receiving the offering. The general theme is "The Cross." Four representatives of the church school will present to the church a 21-inch cross for the aisle chapel. The children themselves raised the money for this gift. Dr. Seth R. Brooks will receive the cross for the church and dedicate it.

In place of the morning sermon Dr. Brooks will speak briefly upon "The Cross in Our Daily Life."

Chevy Chase Presbyterians To Fete Official

To Hold Farewell Reception Tomorrow For Dr. W. B. Bayliss

Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church members will hold a farewell reception tomorrow at 7:30 p. m. in the young people's room for Dr. and Mrs. W. Bradford Bayliss.

Dr. Bayliss, director of religious education at Chevy Chase Church for the last eight years, will transfer to a similiar post in the First Presbyterian Church of Pasadena, Calif., August 1.

At morning worship Dr. J. Hillman Hollister, pastor, will have as his theme, "With Its Shabby Cover."

New York Avenue. "Take It or Leave It" will be the topic of the sermon to be delivered by Dr. Peter Marshall, minister, at 11 o'clock.

The evening services and the midweek prayer services have been discontinued during the summer.

Covenant-First. Dr. Albert J. McCartney, minister, will preach in the morning on "Through the Gardens of the Bible."

The Covenant Fellowship, young people's society, will meet in the summer at Fellowship House, Thirty-sixth and Massachusetts avenue at 7 p. m. each Sunday. Tomorrow's discussion will be led by John Tope.

Central. Dr. James H. Taylor, pastor, will continue in the morning the series of sermons on "Lessons from the Book of Job."

Members of the Young People's Friday Night Class, who completed the course in "The Life of Christ" under Dr. Taylor and were awarded prizes, are John Pannill, Frances Hansford, Yerby Pannill, Dagmar Kollar, Elise Whitmer, Virginia Ebrite and Marvin Noell.

Pilgrims. Dr. Andrew Reid Bird, pastor, will preach at 11 a. m. on "The Secret of Perfect Friendship." At the 7:45 p. m. service, he will speak on "The Lord Jesus' Joy in the Out-of-Door."

The Young People's Society will have its regular vesper service at 6:15 p. m. The Fellowship Group will meet at 6:15 and the Christian Pioneers at 6:30 p. m.

Westminster. Morning worship will be conducted by Warren Taylor, a student at the University of Richmond. The sermon will be delivered by the Rev. Harry V. Porter, pastor, on "The Marks of a Christian."

Metropolitan. The Rev. J. L. Fendrich, pastor, will speak at 11 a. m. on "The Immediate and the Remote," and at 7:45 p. m. on "Starters and Stickers."

Thursday at 7:30 o'clock, 17 delegates chosen to attend the Hood conferences will be presented to the congregation by the organizations who are sponsoring them. This will be the last midweek service until September.

Little Stories about GREAT HYMNS

"DIES IRAE"
(Day of Wrath)

"That day of wrath, that dreadful day
When heaven and earth shall pass away,
Both David and the Sibyl say.
What terror then shall us befall,
When lo, the Judge's steps appall,
About to sift the deeds of all."

It is generally believed that this hymn was composed by Thomas of Celano, a Franciscan of the 13th century. There are 234 English translations of this incomparable poem. Hymnologists of every creed testify to its unapproachable glory. It is freely acknowledged that no adequate translation has yet appeared.

McNutt Gave Secret Data, Buckner Says

Former Sen. Hawes, Fee for Buencamino Mentioned in Letters

the Government charges, lost more than $1,000,000 as a result of his activities—defense counsel succeeded in introducing today a copy of a resolution submitted to the Senate on August 20, 1937, by Senator Walsh. The resolution, had it ever come out of committee, would have expedited payment of interest on the bonds pending their redemption. A similar resolution was shown to have been introduced in the House.

Crowds Wait 4 Abreast

These details, which were brought out in the direct and cross-examination of Lee S. Walden, a Government witness, were of interest to counsel, but proved disappointing to the crowds which flocked to the courtroom in expectation of hearing a repetition of the sensational testimony of the first two days and of the trial, at which Buckner and four co-defendants are charged with mail fraud and conspiracy.

Several hundred spectators tried to get into the courtroom today. They stood four abreast in a line the length of the corridor waiting for the opening of the morning session. There was still a waiting line when court adjourned.

The trial promises to return to its old form when it reconvenes Monday. Scheduled as witnesses are another showgirl and Frank Morgan and Herbert Marshall, screen stars.

Agreed on Buckner as Head

On trial with Buckner, who is a nephew of Thomas A. Buckner, chairman of the board of the New York Life Insurance Co., are Felipe Buencamino, member of the Philippine National Assembly; William J. Gillespie, 37-year-old broker, alleged to be Buckner's chief aid; C. Wesley Turner, former broker, and Capt. John Stuart Hyde, former British army officer and more recently a Hollywood film producer.

Walden, who occupied the witness stand through all but the last five minutes of today's session, had testified Thursday that as representative of Canadian bondholders he joined Buckner, Gillespie, Dr. Max Winkler, broker and associate professor of economics at the College of the City of New York, and F. J. Lisman, retired band trader, on the bondholders' committee.

Buckner, Gillespie and he agreed to put Buckner in as chairman, they controlling three of the five votes on the committee, he said.

Wanted to See Hawes

He knew nothing of the manner in which Buckner alleged dissipated $12,500 of the bondholders' money in a period of about six weeks after the funds had been advanced for committee expenses in July, 1937. He did attend committee meetings, though, and had repeated contacts with both Buckner and Gillespie.

Questioned by William Power Maloney, assistant nited States attorney, Walden, who is a London, Ontario, broker, said that after several trips to Washington on committee business Buckner was authorized to go to the Philippines in the latter part of 1937 to see what he could do there. Among those whom Buckner was to see, Walden said, was former Senator Harry B. Hawes, of Missouri, who was the author of the Hawes-Cutting bill for Philippine independence.

Walden said that the only knowledge he had of what Buckner did in the Philippines was gleaned from what was claimed in Buckner's letter to the committee and from what Gillespie told him. He identified the letter and Maloney read it to Judge Henry W. Goddard and the jury.

Buckner's Letter

The letter follows:

"In accordance with the instructions of the committee the chairman proceeded to Manila, Philippine Island, for the purpose of meeting Senator Harry B. Hawes and with him effecting a settlement of the railroad bondholders problem.

"On arrival there your chairman was able, through the courtesy of His Excellency Paul McNutt, the high commissioner of the Philippines, to obtain access to various confidential reports of the United States Army relating to personalities of certain Philippine officials, as well as a study of the general Philippine psychology. Parenthetically it should be said that the co-operation and consideration shown by Mr. McNutt came as a result of his personal esteem for the committee counsel, George Schein, who arranged the introduction to Mr. McNutt.

"A study of the situation and an appraisal of Senator Hawes' physical condition forced the reluctant conclusion that however willing Senator Hawes might be to intercede for our bondholders his intercession would be fruitless, and therefore a contract was made with Capt. Thomas J. Dugan, chief of the division of investigation of the Department of Justice of the Commonwealth, and his aid enlisted.

Rejected Par Offer

"By reason of his confidential position, Capt. Dugan enjoys the implicit trust of the leaders of the Philippine government, and through him an approach to President Quezon and Felipe Buencamino, chairman of the Nationalist Party and acting speaker of the Legislature, was made possible.

"Both of these men have been convinced of the merits of our contention and have, therefore, agreed that the bonds must be purchased by the Philippine government. Accordingly, the chairman of the rialroad committee has received a suggestion and in response thereto written a letter to your chairman.

"The letter rejects our offering of the bonds at par as too high, but it indicates the willingness of the Legislature to pass a bill providing for payment at 65, if their committee assents. It is heartily recommended that this committee adopt a resolution authorizing the preparation of a letter to be sent to the bondholders informing them of the progress made to date and requesting their assent to a dissent from the price proposed.

"Respectfully submitted,
"WILLIAM J. BUCKNER, Jr.,
"Chairman."

$200,000 "Carrying" Fee

The following January, while Buckner was still in the Philippine Islands, Walden said Gillespie told him that Buckner had written that Buencamino would help them to obtain favorable legislation in the Philippine Assembly, but "he will have to be carried to the extent of 200 bonds."

"What would be the value of those bonds?" Mr. Maloney asked Walden

"$200,000 at par," he answered.

In another communication, it was testified, Buckner reported that both he and "Quezon" (Manuel Quezon, president of the Philippine Commonwealth), were ill so he could not "make a move."

Under cross-examination by John Minton, Buckner's attorney, Walden said that there had been conversation to the effect that "you have to do something for these Filipinos and Orientals to get anything out of them." Buckner learned that, it was indicated, in his "study" of "certain Philippine officials" and of "the general Philippine psychology."

Didn't Make Trip Here

Minton also had Walden identify an expense account submitted by Buckner to the committee in October, 1937. It contained a blanket charge of $5,000 for hotels, $420 for tenographic services, $800 for telephones and telegrams, $1,259 for traveling, $150 for taxicabs, $250 for gratuities and $2,500 for entertainment. Regarding these expenses Walden said tha tit was to be expected that such outlays would be necessary.

A traffic representative of Eastern Airlines, who followed Walden to the stand just before adjournment, testified that Buckner bought tickets for himself and a young woman whom he registered as "Miss B. Fleet" for a trip to Washington at 6 a. m. on April 2, 1938. They did not make the flight, though.

Representative Lanzetta May Testify

By International News Service.

"Dragging my name into this case is injustifiable," declared former Representative James Lanzetta, of New York, today after his name was mentioned in the Buckner case.

Lanzetta, who was mentioned as one of the Congressmen who attended a gay "wine, women and song" party allegedly given by Buckner, told his friends that he may volunteer to testify in the case regarding his participation. He is now Washington representative of Puerto Rican interests.

Union In Tragedy

There is a dreadful coincidence in the disappearance of a French submarine, following diving operations off the coast of Indo-China.

If the first pessimistic reports are confirmed, and if salvage operations prove as difficult as is only too probable, the disaster will be the third of its kind within a month. And in each case one of the three major democracies will have been the victim.

It is less than four weeks since the Squalus sank off the coast of New Hampshire with a loss of 26 American lives. The sinking of the Thetis in the Irish Sea on June 1 took a toll of 99 British sailors and civilians. Aboard the Phenix, at the bottom of the China Sea, is a crew of 63 Frenchmen.

The coincidence is the more tragic because all of these three navies would be willing to abolish submarines if the same disposition were apparent elsewhere. This type of warship is essentially an offensive weapon, most valuable as a commerce raider and threat to merchant shipping. Except for defensive purposes the submarine is a superfluous item in the navies of nations which are peacefully inclined.

The three accidents, coming within so short a period, will arouse deep mutual sympathy in the three nations affected, all of them already closely tied together by bonds of kindred institutions and political ideals. In this fact rests at least some consolation for the families and friends of the missing men.

It has been days since there was any chance of survival for those whose bodies lie sealed within the hulls of the Squalus and the Thetis. In the case of the Phenix, some hope still lingers behind the "serious anxiety" felt by the French Ministry of Marine.

Singapore and Manila lie approximately equidistant—in each case about 1,000 miles—from the spot where the Phenix was last seen. At both of these ports, one under the British and the other under the American flag, is equipment which may conceivably spell the difference between life and death for the jeopardized French seamen.

It is to be expected that from both these bases every assistance possible will be offered the French authorities in Indo-China. Even if it proved vain such action would have a value, in sympathy and friendship, making it far from an empty gesture.

'Mile Of The Century'

Whatever uneasiness our British brethren may feel about the Tientsin business, they have none about Mr. Sydney Wooderson. They are superbly confident that Mr. Wooderson is going to show his heels to our Messrs. Glenn Cunningham and Chuck Fenske at Princeton today, and that he is going to do it in something like four minutes flat.

A few years ago, it would have seemed unthinkable that any human being could run a mile as fast as that without hitchhiking most of the way. Yet all Mr. Wooderson needs do is to clip slightly a hair's breadth from his own world's record.

Still our Mr. Cunningham is not exactly a mud turtle, either. About a year ago, at Dartmouth, he ran a mile in 4:04.4, which is faster than Mr. Wooderson or anybody else has done it. But it was done indoors and for some reason doesn't count the same as on a cinder track. Yet it would be enough to indicate that he is almost as likely as Mr. Wooderson to make history today were it not for rumors that he is not now in the best of condition.

Possibly the basis of these rumors is the fact that Mr. Cunningham has lately been occupied by a lecture tour. It is well known how careful track athletes must be about conserving their wind.

In England these reports about Mr. Cunningham have been received with a certain skepticism and irritation, as though the purpose behind them was to take some of the sheen off the garland of olive leaves it is anticipated Mr. Wooderson will be wearing outside his spectacle bows tonight. In fact, the London Daily Express has protested against "the alibi barrage that is being put up by Americans."

The point, if we may say so, is not well taken. If it is logical—and it certainly is—for Mr. Griffith to say that he would have a good ball club if only he had some good ballplayers, it is equally so for Mr. Cunningham's admirers to suggest that he does a little better when he is able to run a little faster. (Besides, old fellow, you don't "put up" a barrage; you put it "down"—and on the line if you please.)

Also, speaking of alibis, the apprehensions of the London Times that the five American runners may conspire to jockey Mr. Wooderson out of victory or out of a new world's record, seem gratuitous. However, these little things seem quite unlikely to precipitate an international crisis. So let us hope that this "mile of the century" will be one occasion on which the race is "to the swift."

Growth Of Bureaucracy

In a broadcast to the Eastern regional conference of the Civil Service Assembly, Attorney General Murphy presented some quite startling facts about public pay rolls. Our national, State and local governments, he says, employ approximately 4,000,000 persons whose salaries amount to nearly $6,000,000,000 yearly.

These are staggering figures, and Mr. Murphy makes the most of them by pointing out that the average family's share of the expense of the public pay roll is $200 per year, or over 13 per cent of the average family income.

Estimates of this sort, of course, have little significance unless one knows a great deal about the scope of governmental activities and the efficiency of Government employes. In a highly socialized state, most of the public income would be absorbed by government employes and a mere 13 per cent would seem unimportant. In the United States, governmental powers, though rapidly expanding, are still confined to a restricted sphere of activity. Consequently, the public pay roll undoubtedly takes a heavy toll from productive workers who are taxed to defray the running costs of government.

Naturally, every effort should be made to reduce those costs to a minimum by careful selection of public employes and the elimination of all superfluous placeholders. Mr. Murphy asserts that, without curtailment of essential governmental functions and activities, the country could get along with less than 3,000,000 public employes and with a pay roll less than $5,000,000,000. There is no indication of the investigation behind these estimates. But in view of the waste and inefficiency of the spoils system, which still controls a huge number of appointments and promotions, they do not seem exaggerated.

It is, however, much easier to preach the need of retrenchment than to practice it, especially at a time when governmental activities are expanding and new duties are constantly being assigned to administrative agencies. The Department of Justice has certainly not been backward about swelling the army of public employes and adding to the size of the pay roll. No doubt, a very good case can be made out for the increases in personnel in this case. But one strongly suspects that a good many other departments also regard expansion as a necessity for which apologies are not necessary.

The Attorney General has concisely summed up the task that confronts those who wish to improve the quality of the public service. Not only must patronage be eliminated, as he says, but we must have "positive, progressive, efficient personnel management aimed not merely at ending the spoils system but especially at the achievement of real efficiency and economy."

This is indeed, an undertaking that would "test the mettle of our true statesmen and real political leaders." Mr. Murphy has stated the objective admirably, but his broad generalizations do not tell us how to attain the administrative efficiency and economy which he rightly regards as a matter of paramount public importance.

Local Taxation

Both the District Commissioners and the Citizens' Advisory Tax Committee are urging the Senate to substitute a combination of an income tax limited to the higher brackets and a retail sales levy in place of the unacceptable local income tax passed by the House.

While this substitute plan would be preferable to retention of the inequitable and slipshod income-tax measure approved by the House, little else can be said in its favor. A severely restricted income tax and a sales levy that would bear heavily upon low-income groups form an extremely unsatisfactory alternative to a comprehensive graduated tax on net income, properly adjusted to individual capacity to pay.

The Citizens' Advisory Committee could have made a major contribution to the cause of local tax reform by supporting a scientific but comprehensive form of income taxation designed to offset losses from repeal of taxes on gross business receipts and on intangible personal property. With numerous State income tax laws to serve as both a guide and a warning, it should not be difficult to frame a District income-tax measure that would yield a fair amount of revenue without imposing undue hardship upon any group of taxpayers. It is significant, in this connection, that President Roosevelt yesterday advocated broadening the income-tax base.

Apart from questions of revenue, it is desirable that any tax levied on the income of District residents should be applicable to the lower income groups. In that way, as the President emphasizes, more citizens become tax conscious and their interest in local affairs is forthwith intelligently stimulated. Taxes collected indirectly from the people, however onerous, never arouse the taxpayer's interest in the cost of governmental operations in the same way as levies paid directly into the public treasury.

Before taking action upon any local tax proposals, however, the Senate should of course decide upon the amount of the Federal contribution to the District. It is patently illogical to try to devise a plan for raising revenue before it is known how much revenue needs to be collected. A rational method of adjusting Federal payments, as is so simply and equitably provided by the Overton formula, is prerequisite to an improvement in the District tax laws.

It will be deplorable if the House income-tax bill is made an excuse for further delay in providing the District with a well-balanced and equitable system of taxation. In this, as in other respects, Washington should be a model for other local governments to follow, instead of a horrible example to be avoided.

Suspended Warfare

Ministries of propaganda and "enlightenment" constitute an important part of government in totalitarian countries. The reason is that such nations are psychologically in a perpetual state of war. And war demands the regimentation not only of men's activities but also of their minds.

Democracies, on the contrary, regard peace as the normal state and war as a lamentable aberration. They also abhor regimentation, on the reasoned assumption that the clash of opinion and diversity of belief make for progress and national well-being.

It is a very significant development, therefore, that Great Britain has now found it necessary to establish something like a replica of the ministries of propaganda to be found in Germany and Italy.

Actually the function of this new agency, to be known as the Foreign Publicity Department of the British Foreign Office, will differ materially from the activities performed by Dr. Goebbels' ministry. It will exercise no censorship over the British press. It will not try to regiment British minds. Its role, for the time being, will be limited to spreading abroad official British versions of international developments. Yet this is an activity for which no counterpart is to be found in the peacetime history of the kingdom. The only parallel is that to be found during the World War, when a ministry of information was established.

But that parallel is very revealing. It shows that Great Britain intends to fight fire with fire. Because of the drastic censorship which exists in Germany, and the intense Nazi propaganda to which Germans are unceasingly subjected, it has proved difficult for British statesmen to counteract Hitler's encirclement bogey, or to make known to Germans the real aims and intentions of British foreign policy.

On the other hand, the existence of a free press in Great Britain has enabled pro-Nazi elements there to present without interference views favorable to the Third Reich and critical of the British government. The purpose of the foreign publicity department will obviously be to right the balance in this regard. The war of words will be carried to the Third Reich, even as Nazi leaders have been able to carry it to Great Britain.

Another indication that Great Britain deems herself in a state of bloodless war is the announcement by the Chamberlain government of its plans to place a special tax on the excess profits derived from rearmament orders. At the same time the new rules prevent anyone from enforcing the payment of rents, mortgages or insurance premiums during a man's period of military service, or recovery of any article partly bought on the installment plan by a conscript.

These and similar provisions indicate that Great Britain is embarking on an extension of governmental control over private activity which, however extraordinary by peacetime standards, is not unusual in time of war. Indeed, except for actual fighting, the line between war and peace in Europe is becoming hard to distinguish.

Dr. Smith's Request

Perhaps anticipating Dr. Carrie Weaver Smith's request that her dismissal as superintendent of the National Training School for Girls be changed from "dismissal with prejudice to resignation without prejudice," Chairman McReynolds of the Board of Public Welfare asked that the original recommendation be upheld. Rather naively, Mr. McReynolds confesses to a feeling that the board itself has been put on trial at the hearings, because it recommended Dr. Smith's dismissal.

This attitude of seeking vindication for previous official action has been very apparent in the course of the hearings before the District Commissioners. They, too, seem to feel that their judgment in sanctioning Dr. Smith's dismissal is on trial. Hence, instead of encouraging Dr. Smith to make a full and complete statement, they have been inclined to a perceptibly hostile attitude.

In spite of this handicap the former head of the National Training School has made a vigorous defense of her conduct and has succeeded in bringing out facts not known to the public at the time of her dismissal. Under these circumstances, and in view of Dr. Smith's inability to secure a wholly impartial review of the charges against her, it seems only reasonable to supersede the verdict of "dismissal with prejudice" by that of "resignation without prejudice."

Work Relief

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: If there ever was a principle that must be recognized by all parts of the population of this country of ours, it is that in times of stress and unemployment the Government, that is; all the people, must give the unemployed employment. If private capital cannot give the needed employment the Government must provide it.

Without such public aid, thousands or millions will be left to starve and freeze or adopt desperate means of preserving their existence. Where there is not actual starvation there will be malnutrition, which will diminish the vitality of our people.

It is proposed that men be given relief work for 18 months and be dropped from the rolls, another batch needing work being then employed. The second batch are to suffer for 18 months until their time comes, when the first are to be put upon the rack. Surely our legislators will not be swept off their feet to pass such legislation.

Equally fantastic is the proposal to proscribe white-collar aid. This class of people are to be left out of consideration entirely if the false economists have their way. Women are white-collar workers: logically they should be left out. Children are not manual laborers. White-collar employments are to be discredited and discouraged.

No class of workers should be cut out. If this kind of legislation is enacted, there are bound to be sad repercussions. H. C. M.

Our Blunder

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: We have had brought to our attention a cartoon from The Washington Post of June 8, showing the American and the British Flags displayed with the British flag on the observer's left, in violation of the Flag code, according to which the American flag should be on the observer's left.

It is, of course, regrettable that such a violation of the Flag code should appear in one of the leading papers of the Capital of the Nation and it goes to emphasize the need for the work that is being done by the United States Flag Association and other patriotic societies in educating the American people in the correct display of the flag of our country. Constructive News

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: On behalf of the sponsors of the national meeting for moral rearmament held in Constitution Hall, Washington, D. C., on Sunday, June 4, I would like to thank you for the excellent coverage given by your paper. In these days of tension and unrest it is encouraging to see constructive news in contrast to so much that is negative and destructive. I am sure that the public generally also welcomes news which gives hope of an answer.

The press in disseminating the facts of constructive events, as you have so well done in connection with the Constitution Hall assembly, will not only be meeting a widespread public demand but will be rendering a national service.

It is essential in these days when the people of our country are subject to the pressures of false propaganda from various sources that we see clearly and encourage those forces which tend to unite rather than divide our people. Such action will go far toward creating a fear-free, hate-free citizenship and a responsible public opinion.

The movement for moral rearmament represents a determination to lift the thinking and living of men to a new moral level as the key to the solution of social and economic problems today. It has, of course, drawn its strength from all classes and includes men of all parties and creeds. Already news of the meeting in Washington has prompted businessmen and political leaders in California to arrange a moral rearmament demonstration in the Hollywood Bowl, July 19. Not only are national leaders from the Western nations expected to be present but also delegates and leaders from Japan and China.

"Japan's Challenge"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial, "Japan's Challenge," in The Post on June 15 is certainly worthy of consideration. Indeed, it should be given more than a cursory examination because it is obvious that a small island in the Pacific is assuming the role of "the dog in the manger."

Japan's recent movements, such as the seizure of the International Settlement at Amoy and the Tientsin blockade referred to in your article, have a deeper significance than appears on the surface. It is true that it will affect the political and economic status of both France and England in China, but it seems as though its influence will be more extensive and will ultimately include other nations as well. It might possibly result in impeditive consequences with respect to world trade.

The supercilious attitude adopted by Japan seems to be well timed, but if France and England would take positive steps rather than merely suggesting that retaliatory action be taken, they could not only maintain their own status quo but they could also do much toward preserving the interests of other nations. Such action would be justifiable on the grounds that China invited trade and permitted certain countries to establish settlements therein.

When viewed from the standpoint of the size of the British empire with that of Japan, it looks as though the "tail is wagging the dog" again.

Royalty

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: These democratic and republican United States will have none of the trappings of royalty except kings and queens, especially queens, and oh, how we love them! We have movie queens, carnival queens and bathing beauty queens; we have vegetable, fruit and flower queens; we have furniture queens and ice-box queens and bathtub queens.

How refreshing to have had here a true Queen who by her beauty, simplicity, graciousness, womanliness and kindliness has resuscitated the word. Long live the Queen! J. P. DAVIS.

Washington, June 13.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The letter from "Visitor From Los Angeles" in your issue of June 13, is amusing and indicates that he or she does not appreciate our First Lady's motive in serving "hot dogs" and presenting American music.

Why does not he or she criticize Lady Lindsay for serving strawberry shortcake, another traditional dessert of our country, and as humble as the hot dog? The most luscious strawberries are those of England, so they of themselves were no especial treat.

Why?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Why is it that the gentlemen on the Hill think that a widow, old and unable to work, receiving an unearned income from the earlier efforts of her husband and herself, can live on less than an able-bodied citizen capable of assuming two jobs if necessary, as many do, both in and out of the Government?

Why do these worthy gentlemen think that the old residents of Washington who thoughtfully guarded against pauperism should be penalized when they are not willing to part with 1 cent of their $10,000 salaries? Why? UNAFFECTED.

On The MacLeish Nomination

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Milton J. Ferguson, president of the American Library Association, in his protest against the nomination of Archibald MacLeish to be Librarian of Congress, has no authority to speak in the name of the 13,000 members of that organization. He is chief librarian of the Brooklyn Public Library; his presidential office is purely honorary and is going to terminate in a few days with the automatic election of his already designated successor at the annual convention of the association, which opens at San Francisco the 19th of this month.

That Mr. Ferguson's opinions on public questions are not representative of the library profession in this country was indicated last summer by the storm of indignant protest that greeted his inaugural address, in which he went out of his way to attack the growing movement for organization of library employes.

In the present circumstance, an official with more respect for his membership, instead of rushing into print on his own initiative, would have allowed the organization to voice its opinion next week in democratic fashion.

Anyone having contact with the rank and file of library workers is well aware that the selection of Mr. MacLeish by the President is welcomed as promising the infusion of a much-needed progressive and social-minded spirit into the administration of our national library.

That the President, after a year's search, was obliged to go outside the ranks of the profession to find a man of sufficient breadth of vision and force of character is less surprising when one considers the narrowly technical nature of Mr. Ferguson's objection to the appointment.

What the Library of Congress needs is not a technically trained expert in cataloguing books, filing cards, and listing bibliographical references, but a broad-gauge administrator who would put new life into that institution and relate it to the social forces of our time and country.

Such a man, thousands of librarians believe, the President has most happily found in Mr. MacLeish. We have confidence that he will make our national library a powerful force for the preservation of democracy, and a vital factor in that education for a more effective and intelligent democracy which is so much needed at the present time.

Lost Library

DURING recent excavations in Moscow to extend the underground railway the notorious "Henchman's Court" of Ivan the Terrible was discovered, the vast subterranean vault where countless victims were tortured and executed in horrible ways. The passage from the Kremlin to the torture chamber has been found and hope has been raised that further tunneling will bring to light the long-lost library of the Muscovite Czars, often inaccurately referred to as the library of Ivan the Terrible.

There may be stupendous additions to the classical literature now extant, works entirely unknown to modern scholarship, even the lost books of the historian Livy, the false report of whose discovery caused such excitement some years ago. Early last century a professor engaged in research with quite another object happened upon an anonymous document in a low German dialect, undated but for the sixteenth century, which gave an account of the library.

The writer claimed to have examined the manuscripts, having been asked by the Czar to undertake their translation, a task to which he was not equal. The document states that they numbered 800, written on fine parchment and bound in covers of gold, most of them in Greek but many in Latin, partly acquired by purchase, partly received as a gift. In a perfunctory list of the authors represented are such names as Cicero, Tacitus, Livy, Polybius and some quite unknown.

Toward the end of the sixteenth century the learned of Europe were excited by a rumor that a collection of priceless manuscripts, mostly in Greek, was concealed in the Kremlin, having been sent there by the last Byzantine Emperor on the eve of the fall of Constantinople in 1453, to save them from destruction by the Turks.

The first reference to the library, however, occurs in a short biography of a Greek monk from Mount Athos. According to this, Basil III, father of Ivan the Terrible, found in 1519 among the treasures accumulated in the Kremlin innumerable books in Greek, a language no one in Moscow could understand, in an out-of-the-way repository. He requested the Patriarch of Constantinople to send a scholar to translate them, and Maximus, the Byzantine cleric, versed in the tongue of the Slavs, as well as clerical lore, left his cloisters in obedience to the summons.

Basil conducted him to the store-chamber and the monk was filled with amazement at the number and nature of the parchments. "Never, O Orthodox and Autocratic Sovereign," he exclaimed, "has it been my good fortune to see such a store of Greek texts as your princely care has assembled. Even in Greece it was not vouchsafed to me to behold such a multitude of books." The gratified monarch bade him set about translating them without delay. And that is all we know. There the information provided by the brief biography of "Maximus the Blessed" tantalizingly ends.

The next reference to the elusive library occurs nearly 50 years later. Ivan the Terrible had captured Dorpat and certain German inhabitants were compelled to migrate into Russia. Wettermann, a devoted Lutheran pastor, followed his flock into exile. The Czar learned of his high reputation as a scholar and summoned him to the Kremlin, for the brutal autocrat, who shed rivers of blood without compunction, slaying the Patriarch and his own son himself, was nevertheless a patron of learning.

Ivan unlocked subterranean vaults containing manuscripts in Hebrew, Greek and Latin, thickly covered with dust, having lain undisturbed for many years. The chronicle to which we owe our knowledge states that he would have had the German translate them, but this would have entailed his sacrificing his pastoral work and everything else to the task, while the Kremlin officials represented to Ivan that he was not really competent, probably to spare themselves trouble. So the manuscripts were again sealed up under triple locks in their hiding place.

Last century a Russian archeologist brought to light a petition to Peter the Great, dated December, 1724, by a former bell-ringer in a Moscow church, who claimed to have learned from a government official who had visited a secret vault at the command of Peter's sister, Sophia, the whereabouts of the hidden hoard, two chambers with iron doors having strong chains and great padlocks, packed with chests to the ceiling.

"Let the Vice Governor examine this carefully," wrote Peter across the request of the bell-ringer to be allowed to make investigation. Accordingly he was provided with assistance and tools and began digging. A few weeks later, before anything had been found, Peter died and the operations were suspended. Some ten years later the persevering bell-ringer succeeded in getting them resumed, but they were soon finally abandoned on the ground that the excavation might injure the foundations of the armory.

Restrictions

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Ever since economy advocate Clifton Woodrum from Virginia has had his House Committee investigating WPA expenditures, there has been a general conviction in Washington among legislators that the WPA needed restrictions, especially in regard to the efforts of communism to bore from within. Rotation of WPA jobs to eliminate "chislers" and "career" workers, who are kept on through so-called "unions" has also been proposed.

Apportionment of jobs among States on the basis of a definite, specific formula should be considered. This would do away with giving huge grants to "doubtful" States just before a political election. One of the most favored suggestions offered is that WPA drop its theater, writers and arts projects.

Fair Enough

Fit For A King

THE AMERICAN hot dog, a habit-forming sausage, received the name by which it is now known to all clean-minded, right-thinking Americans and to the British King and Queen and their subjects from the late Tad Dorgan, the sport page cartoonist and humorist of the Hearst papers at the time of the Thaw trial, in 1906. This delicacy, up to that time, was known variously as the wiener-wurst, the frankfurter and the Coney Island red hot.

There was a humorous superstition that the Coney Island red hot contained a large ingredient of dog meat, and Tad, whose humor was often unexplainable, as in the case of his famous phrase, "Yes, we have no bananas," introduced a family, or litter, of little animated sausages into the comics with which he was lampooning the legal farce then in progress at the old Criminal Courts Building. These little sausages would be seen in queer antics, holding conversation in talk balloons, while little fox terriers, frisking through the disconnected scenario, tossed off remarks which identified them as departed relatives. Tad called them hot dogs, and the day he died Mrs. Dorgan presented to the late Harry Stevens, the New York ball yard and race track caterer, the original drawing of the first of the series in which the name "hot dog" appeared. The drawing now hangs on the wall of the Stevens office, from which the late Harry's sons direct a business extending, geographically, from Boston to Miami, and culinarily, if such a word there be, from caviar and champagne to dogs and pop.

Hot Dog Contents May Vary Greatly

THE STEVENS dog is prepared according to a house formula by Otto Stahl, in New York, and the Esjay Co. in Maryland, and is boiled, not fried or grilled, and served in a long roll made to private specifications. The Stevens firm has served thousands of miles of these dogs, but does not sell them in bulk or off the premises of the ball yards and horse yards for which it holds concessions.

In the East hot dogs vary greatly in content, some containing cereal and some being composed entirely of meat, but Eastern dogs, generally, are not highly spiced. West of the Alleghenies the popular taste demands more tang, and the so-called dog that is sold in some Western ball parks is not only highly seasoned but is shorter and fatter—a veritable German breakfast sausage—and usually is grilled on a gas plate.

New York will have nothing to do with popcorn, a Western delicacy, and attempts to popularize it at the New York ball parks were expensive failures. Nor has the hot tamale or chile con carne or chili mac, which is the short name for chile macaroni, ever enjoyed any demand here, by contrast with the popularity of those eccentricities in the Middle West and Southwest. The Westerners also consume vastly greater quantities of hamburger than Easterners, and have neither social nor gastronomic fears of the onion, raw or fried.

Delicacy To One Is Poison To Another

TAMALES, chili con carne and chile mac may be obtained in the neighborhood of Harlem, and the snoot sandwich, a specialty of Beale street—or, anyway, of the Memphis Negro night life sector—also is to be had. The snoot sandwich and sandwiches made from the ears and tails of pigs, fried in grease, are delicious, and are hereby recommended, although the King and Queen, had they been confronted with such, might have been pardoned for demanding kippers instead.

It is all in the point of view and the training of the individual. The kipper is a terrible thing to most Americans, but Englishmen rip kippers and sift the bones out of their mustaches and teeth with practiced skill. A cannibal feasting on the boiled shank of a missionary probably would regard an English breakfast kipper as unfit food, as, indeed, it does seem to all inexperienced persons on first acquaintance.

Fastidious Person Sets Limit At Eight

THE NOTION that the dog is vulgar and that therefore it was socially unseemly to serve the same to their Britannic Majesties vanishes when it is known that practically all of the richest, and therefore, of course, the very best, Americans eat hot dogs. At the races the aristocracy belly up to the counters and take them from the hands of the counter men, smear them with mustard and wander off with yellow goo dripping down their fronts, and one glimpse of a Vanderbilt in this activity, or one taste of a good dog, is enough to convince the most skeptical that this it not a patronizing affectation of the quality.

Babe Ruth, incidentally, sometimes would eat four or five on the bench in the course of a ball game, and overindulgence once made him ill and laid him up for several days. A dozen, however, is too many. Eight, maybe, or, at the outside, nine, but 12 is excess.

The Mead Loan Measure

By Mark Sullivan

Would It Add To "Existing Fears?"

A SENATE sub-committee is holding hearings on the Mead bill, to provide Government-guaranteed loans to small businessmen. The bill, if enacted, would work this way:

A man would like to go into business—start a retail store, or a small manufacturing business—any kind of business. Or, a man having a small business would like to enlarge it.

He goes to the local bank. In some cases the bank would lend him the money. At all times, banks do this, when the circumstances are right. Just now banks are especially eager to loan money, for they have much of it on hand, and they can only make a profit by lending it.

But in the present case the bank may not wish to make the loan. For refusal, the bank may have any of many reasons. The loan may be of a sort which existing law forbids banks to make. By law or custom, banks rarely loan a man money to start a new business—bank loans are usually confined to businesses which are already going concerns, where the owner already has a plant or a store, and has money of his own in the business. Also, banks rarely make long-term loans—usually six months, or some such brief period, is the limit. Usually bank loans are on stocks on a dealer's shelves, which the borrower can sell in a few months, and thus pay off the loan; or on raw materials which will be manufactured and sold in a few months.

Borrower Has Recourse To RFC

FOR ANY OF these reasons, the bank may not wish to make the loan in the present case. Or they may be reluctant for another reason. They may feel that the man is not a good businessman. After sizing him up and inquiring into his record, the bank may feel he would not be a success in business.

For whatever reason, the bank says to the man: "We can't make this loan, but you go around to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation." That is the Government agency for lending money and guaranteeing loans.

The man goes to RFC, and tells his story and his hopes. RFC is not required to take care of him. The Mead bill gives RFC plenty of reasons to refuse, plenty of "outs." RFC is given discretion to "determine what constitutes a business purpose." And RFC can set up regulations which would bar any kind of case it does not like to take.

But suppose RFC decides to handle the case. In that event, RFC, under the Mead bill, does these things:

RFC tells the bank to make the loan.

90% Of Loan Will Be Insured

RFC GUARANTEES that if the loan goes bad, RFC will make good any loss, up to 90 per cent of the loan. (This means 90 per cent of both the principal and any accrued interest.) That is, the bank cannot lose more than 10 per cent of what it lends.

The bank must not charge more than 4 per cent interest. (There is a further small charge, less than 1 per cent, which the borrower must pay to RFC, for an insurance fund to take care of losses.) The loan may be for any period up to ten years.

Obviously, under the Mead bill, if it passes, many men will seek to go into business who are not regarded by the banks as good businessmen. Much depends on the judgment and caution of RFC. With poor judgment, it can make many loans that will go bad, start many men in business who will fail.

In RFC's past operations, in other fields, it has had remarkably good judgment. It's head, Jesse Jones, is one of the ablest men in public life. He is able to "size up" a prospective borrower's character and circumstances and prospects. But if the Mead bill passes and an army of prospective small borrowers descends on Mr. Jones, his difficulties may become great. The pressure of politics will be strong. Persons ambitious to go into business will clamor at their Congressmen to intercede with RFC.

THE PURPOSE of the Mead bill is to create more business. Superficially, it ought to. Tens of thousands of men who would like to be in business will see in the Mead bill a way to make their dreams come true. But the Mead bill, like many New Deal measures, may fail to foresee a future effect.

Consider the effect of the Mead bill on men already in business. These are the men who already can borrow as much as they need from the banks—and who are careful not to borrow more than they can use successfully, and pay back in due course. These are the men who compose the body of American business. These men can be counted on to expand their businesses just as rapidly as conditions warrant.

Consider one of these as he observes the Mead bill. He is, let us say, a retail dealer in a small town. He takes care of all the customers the community has, does all the business that the conditions make possible. He now sees that someone may start competition with him, and divide the available business—someone not equipped to carry on business prudently, someone who is only enabled to go into business by virtue of a Government-guaranteed loan.

In this condition, is the existing businessman likely to expand? Will he not be deterred by apprehension? Will the Mead bill add one more to the many existing fears caused by the New Deal, which now keeps the whole field of business in a state of semiparalysis?

Books And Things

By Lewis Gannett

"Service Entrance"

EVER SINCE factory work—that is, any kind of work outside the home—has been open to women, bewildered complaints have been heard that girls take to it in preference to domestic service. Even during the early nineteenth century, when industrial conditions were appalling, girls would choose the factories when they had a choice. Possibly this was in part based on a simple cash calculation which failed to take living expenses into account as included in domestic wages; but there must have been also what might be called human reasons, to weigh the balance. A dominant preference cannot be put aside as perverse or unfounded; it is a solid fact.

THE REASON underlying it should be deductible from such a narrative as "Service Entrance" (Carrick & Evans, $2.50), subtitled "The Memoirs of a Park Avenue Cook." The author, Kyra Goritzina, has the advantage of a double experience, as mistress and maid. In Russia, before the revolution and the war, Mrs. Goritzina was well-to-do; this fact is stated but not enlarged upon. She had a good leisure-class education. Arriving in America as refugees, she and her husband at first looked for white-collar employment. She was qualified to teach languages, she could do fine embroidery. Her husband, a former officer of the Imperial Guards, found work in a department store as a package sorter. But their combined earnings were not quite enough to support them and send back enough money to keep a boy in school in Belgium. They had been obliged to leave their son there. Still more tragically, their youngest child, a baby girl, was in Russia still; they could not get her out. On this, Mrs. Goritzina does not dwell; one can understand why.

After serious discussion, they decided to look for work as cook and butler. The variety of their experiences is sufficiently illuminating. So is the fact that Mrs. Goritzina first took over the duties of a cook, in a private school, because the head master's wife was unable to keep servants for more than a month or two together.

THE FIRST JOB the Goritzinas held jointly was not altogether unpleasant, in that their employers were polite and paid a fair wage; but the hours were intolerably exhausting. Practically, the working day was from 6 in the morning, when tea had to be brought to the master and mistress in their room, until about 9 at night, washing the dinner dishes. The Goritzinas slept in an unheated attic room, and if they had time to sit down there was a gloomy basement at their disposal. In between were 80 steps to climb, and five floors to keep in order, inclusive.

Their next position was the happiest they were to find. The place was a country house. Their employers were generous, considerate and altogether charming. The Goritzinas had comfortable rooms, and at least a full day and a half off once a month. But after a time their employers bought a much larger house, requiring more servants, and the Goritzinas found the new conditions too complicated by enforced association with the rest of the staff. They left regretfully.

ANOTHER PLACE, which they held for several years, with a widower and his grown son, was quite tolerable, in spite of depresing servants' quarters, because there was nobody to nag all day. When this connection terminated, the Goritzinas were employed in a very strange menage, with a financier who evidently had delusions of grandeur. Ultimately, the boss held out the Goritzinas' wages for almost a year, at the same time keeping up a yacht (on credit); and when they left, they had to sue him to collect.

Still more fantastic was the household where master and mistress sometimes got so drunk they didn't know what they were eating for dinner. And there was a strange interlude in the house of a lawyer-politician of dubious connections, where it wasn't always safe to answer the front doorbell or have a light in the living room.

SEARCHING FOR the common denominator in these situations, one must conclude that it consists in the enforced personal relations. People living under the same roof are inevitably so involved with each other that even formal agreements cannot protect them fully. The hours are inordinately long by bad old custom. Genuine privacy for employees is almost impossible, when they are within call day and night. A visible division of hours occurs in any kind of outside employment; and then the employe gets away from the scene of labor, which gives psychological relief.

Japan's Timing

By Barnet Nover

Europe And The Tientsin Crisis

DURING the last few years, the Japanese have displayed a very remarkable sense of timing. Each of their coups has been undertaken at a moment of maximum embarrassment to their rivals and of maximum advantage to themselves.

The undeclared war on China, for instance, was begun in July, 1937, when the international situation appeared singularly propitious for the island empire. Russia had been weakened by an extensive purge of the high command in the Red Army and when tested out by the Japanese on the Amur showed that she was wholly on the defensive.

Great Britain and France were preoccupied with the Spanish question regarding which they manifested a degree of stupidity and pusillanimity which Tokyo did not fail to take into account. And, only two months before, the Congress of the United States had approved a neutrality bill which served as a green light signal to the aggressors; it told them they could go ahead without having to worry about this Nation, since we were determined to make no distinction between aggressors and victims of aggression.

DURING the first year of war, the Japanese were very much put out by the fact that a large part of the supplies which Chiang Kai-shek's forces were receiving came by way of Hongkong and Canton.

To end that traffic, they bombed Canton almost daily and also the railroad from Canton to Hankow. But it was not until the time of the Munich crisis, which underlined Britain's weakness, that the Japanese believed it sufficiently safe to encroach upon Britain's sphere of influence in South China. Then they seized Canton. This action has paralyzed Hongkong.

It was also more than a coincidence that the seizure of Hainan Island followed the fall of Barcelona and the seizure of the Spratly Islands, claimed by France, came close on the heels of the destruction of Czecho-Slovakia.

IT WOULD hardly be correct to say that the international situation today is as favorable from Japan's point of view as was the situation in 1937 or 1938. It is not. But it is more favorable than it may be a month or six months or a year from now.

Great Britain and France have been very slow in building up the so-called "peace bloc." The endless negotiations with Russia have so far been productive of no concrete results and without Russia that bloc may encourage rather than discourage Germany and Italy in their aggressive designs.

On the other hand, the general trend in Europe is in the direction of a strengthening of the anti-aggression forces. Nor can Japan discount the possibility of Great Britain and Russia getting together. If they do and if, in consequence, Hitler and Mussolini are stymied, be it only temporarily, Japan's position might become unenviable. For the war is bleeding Japan white and before many months her position so far as the Western powers are concerned might become highly vulnerable

NO WONDER, then, that the Japanese have chosen this particular moment to strike. They realize that in a contest of the kind taking place at Tientsin, it is they who have the upper hand at the present time. For with the European situation being what it is, Great Britain is in no position to use military or naval means to protect her interests at Tientsin or elsewhere in China. On the other hand, grave difficulties stand in the way of the application of economic measures the London government might want to take.

To compel the British to bow the knee to Japan at Tientsin would serve Tokyo doubly, and it would, in the first place, further weaken British prestige and thus reduce the importance of the peace bloc which derives whatever force it has from British sponsorship. Of equal importance, a British capitulation would pave the way for the speedy destruction of what is left of foreign rights and interests in China.

IN OTHER words, what is involved in the Tientsin struggle is not merely the future of the British and French concessions there but also the future of the International Settlement and the French concession at Shanghai and all other concessions and settlements in China.

While, therefore, the struggle is primarily between Japan and Great Britain it is actually one between Japan and all the Western powers. And the ramifications of this struggle extend all the way to Europe.

That is why neither France nor the United States can be indifferent to what is going on in Tientsin. For eight years the Western powers have been retreating in the face of Japanese pressure. The process began in 1931 with the invasion of Manchuria. It has shown no let-up since.

But the Tientsin blockade constitutes, in some respects, the most serious challenge of all. Retreat this time means surrender. A Japanese victory in Tientsin would end almost the last barrier protecting foreign treaty rights in China. And it might serve as the signal for Germany and Italy to go ahead.

should buy rail equipment and lease it to the roads. There would be an advantage in this, he pointed out, since if a particular road went broke the Government would retain title to the equipment, and could lease it to the receiver. An alternative would be to buy equipment and sell it to the roads on a long-term credit basis.

Eccles Urges Program

Meanwhile, Chairman Eccles of the Federal Reserve Board, leading Administration spending advocate, in an address before the Harvard Business School alumni, in Boston, stressed the need for the new spending-lending program. He went a step further by saying the Government ought to lower consumer taxes, such as the excise levies on automobiles and other manufactures, to encourage consumer buying.

The new program follows generally the outline presented to the Monopoly Committee at the outset of its inquiry recently into ways to put idle money to work, and thus re-employ idle men.

So far as financing of projects deemed self-liquidating is concerned, the program would not affect, at least in published figures, the Federal budget or the public debt. It would adopt, to this extent, the double budget system, advocated before the Monopoly Committee by Dr. Alvin H. Hansen, Harvard University professor of economy.

Dr. Hansen's Plans

Dr. Hansen recommended that private expansion of productive equipment and new construction be stimulated, and that the Government support, partly by public funds, development of new products and industries. In this connection, he recommended creation of a railroad equipment company "financed on a self-liquidating basis by Government funds" to buy and lease equipment to roads.

Another of his proposals under consideration, it is understood, is that the guaranteed interest rate allowed under the Federal Housing Administration act should be reduced, say from a maximum of 5 per cent to 4½ per cent.

The Hansen program contemplated not only self-liquidating projects, but economically and socially desirable projects that were not self-liquidating, such as outlays for hospitalization, public health and education, public low-cost housing, pollution abatement, and the like. The Bureau of Public Roads, he revealed, has developed plans for toll roads, highways, bridges, tunnels, and the like, involving several billions of outlays.

Outside the Budget

New Deal economists have planned the new program for the 1940s. The President, however, indicated that discussions were confined to self-liquidating projects. Proposals, he said, would be outside the budget.

That is, they would increase the Government's existing $5,000,000,000 contingent liability represented by advances which are supposed to be repaid. Instead of attempting to set up a system of capital credit banks to do the job, lending agencies would provide the money, borrowing it themselves in the public market.

At the same time, the Government would have to furnish capital for any new lending agencies, and this would be budgetary expense. The initial cost of a railroad equipment company, it is understood, would be between $300,000,000 and $500,000,000.

Officials revealed that a plan for creating a "Federal Toll Authority" to initiate projects prepared by the Bureau of Public Roads, had been laid before the President.

new data. There is little likelihood, however, that it will change its stand.

Corporation Counsel Elwood H. Seal said he will draft a low-rate income tax over the week-end and have it ready for the committee early next week.

Bates Seeks Data

Representative Bates (Republican), of Massachusetts, said he was obtaining a breakdown of income tax payments to the Federal Government from the District in 1936 and 1937. These figures, he insisted, will give the committee a yardstick upon which a reasonable estimate may be made of the return of a local income levy.

The citizens' committee in its report to the District Committee reiterated its indorsement of the income-sales tax plan, but suggested that if Congress refuses to accept this solution that the present "emergency" taxes should be renewed.

"It is the judgment of your committee," the report stated, "that the present tax structure imposes a far more evenly distributed tax burden than that set up in H. R. 6577 (the House version of the District revenue bill).

"It is highly desirable, indeed, it is almost imperative, that a tax program for the District of Columbia for the ensuing year be speedily enacted into law.

Time Held Insufficient

"Your advisory committee believes that there is not sufficient time available for a thorough study of the tax structure as set up in H. R. 6577. In order to make such a study the present tax structure should be continued for another year if the program recommended in the Pond report is not enacted into law."

The report also made a plea for the inclusion in any tax legislation of "some equitable and definite method of determining the annual Federal payment to the District."

The report was signed by Auditor Donovan, chairman; Corporation Counsel Seal, Richmond B. Keech, Fred D. Allen, Robert V. Fleming, L. A. Carruthers, Charles M. Thomas and Jo V. Morgan.

The Once Over

Daddy Speaks

I am the Typical Father.

I give my family everything it wants.

And it wants everything I get.

I get up at 7 a. m.

I grab a terrible cup of coffee, a hard roll, and dash to the station, my collar and tie in hand, to catch the necessary trolley, bus or train.

I work hard all day.

I get home exhausted.

And my wife wants me to build a rock garden!

I work overtime three nights a week, miss my train and get home in a state of nervous collapse at 8:05.

I get a cold pork chop.

I want to take off my shoes, cool my "dogs" on the back porch and hit the hay early.

But the "little woman" carts me off to a bridge game.

I like to listen to serious radio programs; you know what I mean.

But I never get a chance.

Because the kids want some of the craziest programs on the air.

The only time I get the right of way with the radio is when something gets out of order.

Or when there is nothing on except static or Hitler.

I express my views to my kids!

I air my opinions to my wife.

But nobody pays any attention.

I am the Typical Father.

You can tell it by my runover heels.

And my battered hat.

And the all-gone look.

I haven't had a good rest since Sergt. York captured those Germans.

I should see a doctor.

But I can't. I owe him too much for seeing the wife and children.

I feel nervous and jittery.

But she says it's because I get excited over reading about the baseball games.

I need a couple of aspirins.

But when I go to the medicine cabinet the bottle is empty.

I like the tenderloin.

But I get the tough end.

I am admittedly important around the bungalow only when somebody wants a picture hung, some linoleum laid or a wall whitewashed.

There are six people in the family, all pretty able.

But I air the dog!

Saturday I crave to see a ball game.

But I generally have to come home and grease the auto.

I would spend Sundays at the double-header.

But I spend it in traffic jams, getting nothing but complaints and directions.

I would like to "rush the growler" and drink a pitcher of beer in the cool of the evening on the veranda.

But the wife says it isn't done any more.

I am the Typical Father.

I am a slave to duty.

Tides, storms, gales, floods or other obstacles do not stay me from my appointed tasks.

I have to make good in all kinds of weather.

I think of myself, in a way, as a hero.

But the kids crack "Ain't Popper funny?"

I am the Typical Father.

I know it.

I get entered in Typical Father Contests.

I win neckties.

Eleanor Preston and Capt. Ritchie Are Married at St. John's Church

Mrs. Linton Massey Is Bride's Only Attendant

AN IMPORTANT wedding of the late spring season was that yesterday afternoon at 4:30 of Miss Eleanor Converse Preston, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ord Preston, of 1822 R street, to Capt. William Ludlow Ritchie, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles J. Ritchie of Helena, Ark.

Fashionable St. John's Church, on Lafayette Square, was the scene of the ceremony, at which the Rev. Oliver J. Hart, the rector, officated. Masses of white peonies, gladioli, delphinium and ferns were banked at the altar and at the entrances to the pews.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a frock of cool white marquisette, trimmed with handsome Alencon lace. Her tulle veils, one full length and the other a face veil, fell from a coronet of orange blossoms, and she carried a bouquet of butterfly orchids and lilies of the valley.

Sister Is Matron of Honor

Mrs. Linton Reynolds Massey, of Keswick, Va., sister of the bride, was her matron of honor and only attendant. She chose a gown of pale yellow marquisette, with which she wore a turban of grosgrain to match. Her bouquet was of delphinium, yellow gladioli and deep red carnations.

Charles J. Ritchie, jr., of Houston, Tex., was best man for his brother and the ushers were Murray and Ord Preston, jr., brothers of the bride; James A. Channon, Capt. Robert C. Oliver, Capt. Rinaldo Van Brunt and Capt. Samuel R. Harris.

A reception for the many friends of the couple followed at the Sulgrave Club. Mrs. Preston was gowned in pale pink lace, with a hat of the same shade.

To Make Home In Kansas

When the bride left for her honeymoon, she wore a blue and white print with a design of tiny blue aeroplanes, appropriate when one remembers that Capt. Ritchie is a graduate of the Air Corps Training School. A broad-brimmed white hat and blue accessories completed her costume.

After September 8, the couple will be at home at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., Army post.

Among the many out-of-town guests at the wedding were Mrs. C. J. Ritchie, of Houston, Tex., sister-in-law of Capt. Ritchie; Mrs. Richard Maury, jr., and Miss Helen Bates, of St. Louis; Mr. and Mrs. Morris Hall, of Princeton, N. J.; Miss Katherine Waller, of Flushing, Long Island; Mr. and Mrs. Morris Ketcham, of New York; Miss Virginia Waller, of Long Island; Charles Hornburg, Burtis Rapalyea and Mr. and Mrs. Robert Holberton, of New York, and Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Young and Mr. and Mrs. Wallace McClenahan, of Philadelphia.

Is Member of Junior League

The bride attended Holton Arms School here and St. Timothy's in Catonsville, Md. She was presented at the Court of Saint James in 1933 and is a member of the Washington Junior League.

Capt. Ritchie attended the University of Arkansas and then transferred to West Point, where he was graduated in 1925. Later he served in the artillery. He was aide to Harry H. Woodring, the Secretary of War, and was also aide at the White House until a year ago, when he was ordered to the Air Corps Tactical School at Maxwell Field, Ala.

Many prenuptial parties were given for the couple, among them a dinner on Thursday evening at which Mr. and Mrs. Preston were hosts at the Chevy Chase Club.

H. P. Erwins Give Tea at Estate Here

Guests Impressed With Sylvan Beauty Of 'Arbremont'

Guests at the garden party given yesterday by Mr. and Mrs. Henry Parsons Erwin felt, as they wandered about the grounds of their beautiful estate, Arbremont, that they were miles from any town. In reality, Abremont is situated in the city, at the corner of Upton street and Linnean avenue, but it is surrounded by so many trees that one would think himself in the country.

The red brick Georgian house looks out over a grassy lawn which leads to a charming, tree-hung swimming pool. Nearby is the Erwin "menagerie"—they have quite a collection of animals, housed in cages on one part of their estate.

Yesterday Mrs. Erwin wore a gown of violet organza, floor length, with edgings of white flowers on the skirt and bodice. A white hat, trimmed with narrow velvet ribbons, which ended in streamers, completed her costume.

At one of two long tables set up under the trees, and centered with silver baskets of purple Japanese iris and white blossoms, Mrs. Delos A. Blodgett, mother of the hostess, poured tea. She wore a white frock with a pattern of sweetpeas in fuchsia and purple. The Misses Eileen and Hope Erwin, young daughters of the house, with their houseguest, Miss Elizabeth Bentley, of Lawrence, Long Island, assisted. Mrs. Erwin's sister, Mrs. David St. P. Gaillard, was to have poured tea, but was confined to her home with a cold.

Mr. and Mrs. Erwin recently returned from New York, where they took their two daughters to see the fair. While the two latter attend camp this summer, their parents will remain at Arbremont.

Should Girl Accept Fiance's Offer to Pay Expenses Of Her Week-End Visit to Seaside Resort?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Mine is a problem of propriety. I have been keeping steady company with my girl friend for about three years. We plan to marry as soon as financial conditions permit. In other words, we are unofficially engaged. Now, on the week-end of July 4, we plan to take a trip to Ocean City, N. J. Our chaperones will be two of her girl friends, whom she has known for years. The three girls will share a hotel room together.

My problem is this: Would it not be proper, considering our relationship, for me to pay all her expenses on the trip, since I suggested and planned it, and extended the invitation to her? She maintains that it would be highly improper for me to pay her portion of the hotel bill. But for the life of me, I can see nothing wrong in doing so. We have decided to follow your advice. Please answer soon, as we wish to make final arrangements. Yours truly, W. M. S.

DEAR W. M. S.: From your own viewpoint, I am sure there would be nothing in the least wrong—ethically or morally—in your paying your fiancee's traveling expenses and hotel bill for this week-end jaunt to a seaside resort. And yet I am convinced that her own sense of the fitness of things has propounded the right answer—namely, that she could not accept such well-meant generosity without unduly embarrassing herself.

Your whole idea in planning the trip was to provide an enjoyable outing for all—but primarily for the girl and yourself. And since she shrinks from the suggestion of your paying her bills, it stands to reason that her pleasure in the occasion would be spoiled if you were to override her wishes. While she will undoubtedly be much in your company, she will of necessity spend on equal amount of time with her room mates, and it is hardly fair to set her insidiously apart from them, through providing special arrangements for her which do not extend to accommodate them. After all, one supposes that these young chaperones are going along as much to accommodate you two as to see the sights, and if the trip is to leave a "good taste" (as we say) in the mouths of all, I think it should be conducted, throughout, on the basis of a four-way division of expenses.

Your fiancee is animated by intuitive, if undefinable, considerations of good breeding, in declining to accept gratuities from you which the fastidious woman could freely accept only from husband, father, brother or other close kin. You have reason to be proud of her for her decision in this instance, since it argues her possession of a thorough-going delicacy of perception which entitles her to admittance into the most recherche society.

Bracer for "Despondent"

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I read "Despondent's" letter and your reply of June 13, and I am sure you gave her the right advice. But I doubt that reading a book—even the right book—could give her the brace that she could find in fellowship with some person who believes in the power of prayer, the love of God, and the healing hand of Jesus.

I love to find someone to whom St. John's Gospel means so much! I never fail to marvel at its power and beauty and strength. It must have been John's spiritual quality that caused Jesus to give His mother into John's keeping. And John's spiritual perception must have profited endlessly by Mary's presence in his home. They must have shared—which brings me to the point of this letter.

Your words, "Man's extremity is God's opportunity," are words which I have often heard in the Oxford Group. Is that where you heard them? Anyway, I know that you have referred some of your desperate correspondents to members of the group, and I hope you will do so in "Despondent's" case. Truly, they have vision and a faith that lives and breathes and stretches forth a helping hand to anyone in doubt and despair. And God uses that faith as a channel through which He sends His healing love and forgiveness. You are in a wonderful position to help poor, ailing humanity. May God bless and guide you. Sincerely yours,

G. H. E.

A Clearing House

DEAR G. H. E.: My casual acquaintanceship with some of the very fine local members of the Oxford Group has not been sufficient, I must confess, to influence either my vocabulary or my spiritual philosophy of life. In those instances where I have referred certain "desperate correspondents" to the good offices of this group, I was actuated, not by special individual allegiance to its particular pattern of salvation (social and moral), but by the belief that the group was uniquely qualified to assist that particular individual in solving his particular problem.

One of the manifold functions of a department of this kind is to act as a sort of clearing house in establishing contact between the needy and their supposedly best source of supply. There is majority agreement among spiritually minded persons, I think, that God works in a mysterious way His wonders to perform, and that all who will may do God's work, some in one way, some in another, each according to his special talent and individual capacity. Thus, I would not disparage, as secondary in usefulness to the fellowship endeavors of the Oxford Group, so dynamically constructive and spiritually discerning a book as Lucius Humphrey's "It Shall Be Done Unto You."

Yet, I shall be happy to refer "Despondent" to the Oxford Group, if she so desires, since I recognize the sincerity of the motives which have inspired your foregoing remarks, with their concomitant invitation to her to acquaint herself with its methods and benefits.

Average June Bride Buys $208 Trosseau

This year's average June bride is spending $208 on her trousseau, according to figures compiled by the National Consumers Tax Commission of Chicago. More is allotted for the bridal gown and veil than any other one garment.

Here is the way the bride budgets her money for her wardrobe: bridal gown and veil, $50; lingerie, $15; three hats, $15; 4 dresses, 2 blouses and suit, $76; sports clothes, $22; gloves and purses, $12, and 3 pair stockings and shoes, $18.

Sweet Girl Graduate

If graduation day in your family is a matter of great moment, reinforce the sweet girl graduate with the prettiest gown that time or money can afford. Your graduation gift may be such a frock as the smiling girl above wears. This is equally appropriate for the big moment when she receives her sheepskin, or for her first real conquest of the stag line. Here is our double-duty proposition of cloudy white Celanese rayon with a permanent crispness. Appliques of pastel flowers prevent too cloying a primness. Nora Corbin, a sage designer of younger crowd fashions, interpreted this frock for sizes 12 to 16

Physical Ed Girl Loses Bulges; To Get Chance at Movies

TWO YEARS AGO no talent scout would have singled out Nancy Ackerman for a second glance. She was not only overweight but was an illustration of the physical ed girl with bulging biceps. Now she is to have a screen test!

How did this change come about? Thereby hangs a story that may wake you up to your own chances for loveliness. To begin with, Nancy Ackerman didn't want to teach basketball, she wanted to correct sway backs and rounded shoulders in a beauty salon. But nobody wanted her. They said she didn't look the part.

For the Hips

So, Nancy enrolled for a course she wanted to teach! Under the expert eyes of Ann Delafield, whose specialty is turning average girls into beauties, she began to look like the person other women would want to look like. And she did such a beautiful job of it that soon you may be seeing her in pictures and thinking how lucky she is!

But it took determination, not luck, to make these changes:

	Before	After
	lbs.	lbs.
Weight	148	115
Bust	36½	34
Waist	28½	22
Hips	40	34
Thigh	24	19½
Calf	14½	12½

As Miss Delafield says, her protege was "as hard as a rock and it was not easy for her to slim down." She dieted, sensibly, but oh, so rigorously! And of course she took specific exercises to correct her proportions. Since she was overdeveloped muscularly (something most of you will never have to worry about!), the exercises were of the rolling and spanking variety which Miss Delafield has found most successful in dealing with hard, compact weight.

Cinderella Course

Try the "double hip spank:"

Lie on the back on the floor, arms straight out from the shoulders, knees flexed and feet on the floor near the hips. Keep the knees together, relax the waistline, and drop the legs to the floor on the right. Return to position and drop legs to floor on the left. Repeat 50 times, spanking thighs on floor as hard as possible.

And here's the "calf spank:"

Sit on the floor with weight on hands behind the body, knees pulled up to chest, and toes curled back toward instep. Slide the right leg down on the floor with a smack, pull it up to chest, and slide the left leg down. Continue for 30 counts.

Rolling, Dieting And Spanking Was Procedure

Exercises like the foregoing will slim the hips, thighs and legs for any reducer, but they are especially suggested for either the person with compact fat or for the person who is greatly overweight and should not attempt strenuous exercise.

Stuffed Vegetables Aid Economy And Vary Meals

By Martha Ellyn.
The Post Food Editor

Stuffing vegetables certainly does save the pennies. You can use chopped beef, ham, shrimp, sausage meat, or can go vegetarian and use corn and chopped nuts. The eggplant is a splendid vegetable for stuffing.

STUFFED EGGPLANT

Parboil 1 medium-sized eggplant for 15 minutes. Cut into halves and scoop out center, leaving shell about ½ inch thick. Chop removed portion of eggplant, add 1 cup soft bread crumbs, 1 tablespoon scraped onion, 3 tablespoons melted butter, ½ cup chopped ham, 1 egg slightly beaten, ½ teaspoon salt, dash of pepper and mix well. Fill eggplant shells. Sprinkle with buttered crumbs and dot with butter. Bake in hot oven, 400 degrees, 25 to 30 minutes. Serves four.

The Gentler Sex

BY MALVINA LINDSAY

The Forgotten Man

He is always escorting—or rather trailing—at least one other woman besides his wife. All of his suggestions as to where to go, what to eat or what to do are promptly and definitely overruled by the feminine bloc.

Most of his wife's relatives and friends are widows or spinsters, and on Sundays and holidays the house is full of women talking about permanents, dresses that have been marked down, reducing exercises and salad dressings, and giving him bored looks when he tries to tell about the new credit system they put in at his office or what's really behind the controversy over the Argentine canned beef.

When he comes unexpectedly upon a group of women in his household discussing a current scandal or relating some very intimate old wives' tales, they stop suddenly and look up. Then one of them says, "It's only John," and they go on in slightly lowered tones.

On his day off he feels underfoot at home everywhere he tries to sit or stand. And in every glance his women folk give him, he senses the unspoken words, "Why on earth don't you go out and take a walk?"

When he is to pick up in the motor car any of his family on a certain street corner, he always has to drive around the block half a dozen times—missing his passengers on each turn as they step into drug stores or go window shopping—and then he is upbraided for being late.

He has no private property. His sons wear his new ties, socks, garters, handkerchiefs, even his shirts. His wife gives away his old trousers, shirts, shoes, his last year's Palm beach suit, his hats that would be perfectly good if he could ever get around to having them re-blocked, and all the old newspapers and magazines he was saving to make clippings from some day.

When his wife is away from home he feels vaguely that his daughters are putting something over on him about the money they need, the places they are going, the beaux they are having—but he is strangely baffled and unable to find out just what they are up to.

He is always going and coming from trains and carrying suitcases of arriving and departing women guests. He chauffeurs groups of women and girls to picnics, parties, and on sight-seeing trips. On these the woman sitting on the driver's seat beside him addresses most of her conversation in loud tones to the other women in the back of the car.

He is taken to church for the good of his soul, to the men's night banquet of his wife's club, to highbrow lawn fetes, to Greek pageants, to inspirational lectures, to educational movies, to fashionable concerts, to worthwhile events of all kinds. Yet when he suggests taking a night off and going to a boxing match he is given a withering look and regarded as a low fellow.

He is assigned the household duties of reading the funny papers to the younger children, of entertaining the elderly and hard-of-hearing women relatives and the stupid and long-winded men relatives, of fixing the faucets, the electric lights, the refrigerator, the "stuck" window and everything else that won't work, of straightening the curtains, lifting the furniture and of running down to the grocery or drug store for whatever is needed in a hurry.

He is seldom allowed to finish a story—or even a sentence. He is reprimanded when he starts to tell his favorite anecdote. He is kicked under the table when he takes too many hot rolls. He is reproached after dinner because he didn't give the important guest more white meat.

Most of the time he moves in the background of the home, a drab, shadowy figure, but——

On Father's Day he comes into his own. He is given a beautiful blue tie with big red polka dots and a new shaving set that will encourage him to do his own barber work.

Bates Report Bans Open Milk Market

Opposes Entry to Production Not Inspected by D. C.; Schulte Action Today

A report strongly opposing the opening of the Washington milk market to producing areas not inspected by District health officers was released yesterday by Chairman Bates, of the House sub-committee which conducted the milk inquiry. But there was some doubt as to whether it would be the majority or the minority report.

The sub-committee voted 3 to 2 yesterday for its adoption, but the action was immediately nullified by a point of order raised by Representative Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana, on the ground that the House was in session at the time.

As a consequence the sub-committee will meet at 9:30 a. m. today with Representative Tenerowicz (Democrat), of Michigan, apparently holding the balance of power.

Representatives Byron (Democrat), of Maryland, and Sandager (Republican), of Rhode Island, yesterday voted with Bates, while Representative Shafer (Republican), of Michigan, and Schulte opposed the report. Shafer said he held the proxy of Representative Vreeland (Republican), of New Jersey, but it was not accepted by Chairman Bates.

Leaves Meeting in Anger

Schulte left the closed meeting in a fit of anger and said he will submit his own report today.

Coincident with releasing the report as drafted by J. Edward Burroughs, counsel, Chairman Bates made public a draft of his bill to establish a milk commission in the District to control prices and regulate the dairy industry. Such a commission is recommended in the report.

The text of the measure revealed that the commission would have broad price-fixing powers that would extend to wholesale milk prices as well as retail prices.

The five members of the milk control board would be named by the Commissioners for five-year terms and be paid on a $15 per meeting basis with an annual maximum salary of $1,000. The health officer would serve in an ex-officio capacity, voting only in matters involving public health.

All present control of milk production and distribution would be transferred to the board by the act.

Asks Standard Accounting

Other recommendations of the Bates-Burroughs report, based on testimony during the hearings, are:

That the 1925 milk act be amended to permit makers of candy and desserts to use cream imported from outside the Washington milkshed for ice cream manufacturing.

That the District health regulations relative to milk production be studied in detail "with the view to possible revision."

That a standard method of accounting for all distributors be adopted.

Some form of bottle deposit be adopted by distributors as a means of lowering the cost and price of milk to the consumer.

Assails Bootlegging

The report assailed the bootlegging activities of one distributor, the Embassy-Fairfax Dairy, and deplored the alleged melting down of butter for conversion into cream.

It indorsed, in general, the co-operative practices of the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers Association, and declared that distributors' profits are high.

Recalling the testimony of witnesses on the District health regulations, the report stated that "it points to the fact that some inspectors have been derelict in their duties and have not obtained the results which were expected of them."

The report cited testimony that the cost of production of milk is 27 cents a gallon, and the average price paid the farmer is 24 cents.

"A Necessary Evil"

"If this be true," it added, "it is certain that the producer is not benefiting by the high cost of milk to the consumer.

"It can be plainly seen that the association, with a membership consisting of 85 per cent of all producers, and shipping approximately 85 per cent of all of the milk in Washington, together with the large co-operating distributors, is in a position to control the price of all milk sold to distributors in the District of Columbia, and this in turn is naturally reflected in the cost to the consumer.

"If this control of prices can be considered an evil, it would appear to be a necessary evil because, without a bargaining agency, the farmers producing the milk supply would be at the mercy of the distributors and would have to accept whatever price the distributors saw fit to pay for the product. The desirability of farm co-operatives is well recognized by the Department of Agriculture as evidenced in the activities in this field."

After citing the testimony of accounts as to profits of the distributors, the report states:

"From the record it appears that the larger distributors enjoy a very substantial return on their investments, and yet it appears that they would suffer a very material loss in the event they were compelled to reduce the price of fluid milk 1 cent a quart.

Bookkeeping May Be Cause

"This, however, may be, and in all probability is, attributable to their bookkeeping. The adoption of a standard method of accounting for all distributors seems highly desirable."

Turning to "bootlegging," the report says:

"There was a great deal of evidence that the practice of importing unlicensed cream into the District of Columbia for fluid consumption has been engaged in constantly by certain distributors and that this condition has existed for some years.

This Reorganization, It Seems, Is More in Spirit Than in Body

Save your nickels. Just because the Interior Department has no room for the fish assigned to it under the President's reorganization plan is no sign the acquarium is going to be scrapped.

Despite all the telephone calls for goldfish, sun perch, and blue catfish with silver tails, the Government is going to let the finny friends of the deep stay where they are—in the Commerce Building.

The rest of the Bureau of Fisheries, including those three Alaskan fur coats in the Commerce lobby showcase, will make the reorganization switch on July 1 as scheduled. Of course, the fish will move, too, "in spirit," which is how most of this streamlining of the Government will take place until space arrangements can be made, it appeared yesterday.

Only at the Budget Bureau, a survey showed, will the new fiscal year find reorganization clicking as it should. Budget officials have been in hectic conferences, shifting some 100,000 employes to the correct pay rolls.

The official assumption is that if a man gets paid by the Department of Agriculture, he works there—even if his office remains at the Department of Labor.

Other reorganization "findings" noted yesterday included:

The re-employment service of the Labor Department will fold on July 1, but the department will endeavor to place in other divisions the 135 employes whose jobs will disappear.

Inland Waterways Corporation, with 12 Washington employes and about 1,200 in the field, has actually moved into the Department of Commerce building—the only physical shift made to date and possible only because of the small office personnel involved.

Twenty-five foreign service employes of Commerce do not yet know whether their merger with the State Department means they will move there. When they leave, Commerce will need to change one of the signs above its big doors.

The Lighthouse Service will remain for a while in the Commerce Building, although its pay checks will come from the Coast Guard. Another change more or less means little to this service, created by the ninth act of Congress and getting ready to celebrate its 150th anniversary. Fifty of its workers are in Washington, approximately 5,000 in the field.

Secretary of Interior Ickes will be in charge of the Bituminous Coal Commission's 1,000 employes after July 1, although the 500 of them in Washington will continue to be housed in the Walker Building.

Employes of the Office of Education, like those of various divisions scheduled to become parts of new agencies, have received no notification of a change date. Until the President names administrative heads of the three new agencies, they are not expected to change.

Open Playgrounds Asked for Summer

The District Public School Association, meeting last night, urged that all school play areas be kept open weekdays from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m. throughout the summer vacation, asserting decreased vandalism and accidents would more than repay the costs.

Officers elected for the coming year were John T. Thomas, president; George Wodgkins, first vice president; Mrs. Daniel Murray, second vice president; William J. Tucker, third vice president; John W. Barse, fourth vice president; Charles Pidgeon, treasurer; Mrs. Dorias Raddiit, recording secretary, and Miss Bede Johnson, corresponding secretary.

Bishop Urges Three Virtues On Catholics

Dr. Kearney Talks To Graduates of Gonzaga School

Three virtues which Catholics must retain if their faith is to survive are intelligence, consistency and enthusiasm, the Most Rev. James E. Kearney, D. D., Bishop of Rochester, last night advised the graduating class of Gonzaga College High School.

"Religion must be intelligent," he said, "because there is such a tendency to underemphasize a man's belief."

Although he derided the totalitarian philosophies because "they really have nothing at their base," he called for similar enthusiasm for Catholicism. "That is what we want and God knows we have something to be enthusiastic about," he said.

U. S. Rabbis Denounce Fr. Coughlin

Charge Radio Priest Perils Democracy Through Prejudice; Isms Are Assailed

A warning that Father Coughlin and "other rabble-rousers" are threatening to destroy American democracy through anti-Semitism was made yesterday by the Central Conference of American Rabbis, meeting in the Mayflower Hotel.

In approving a report of its Commission on Social Justice, headed by Rabbi Barnett R. Brickner, of Cleveland, the conference also urged a $100,000 appropriation for continuation of the La Follette Committee on Civil Liberties; indorsed the Fish bill which seeks to prohibit military drill or the bearing of arms by members of private or political organizations, and called for a peaceful A. F. of L.-C. I. O. settlement.

Communism, fascism and naziism were attacked as "founded on materialism and dictatorship."

Ask Neutrality Act Revision

"We have always been opposed to these isms," the report stated, "because they stand in direct conflict with our spiritual interpretation of life and because they deny the sanctity of human personality and the freedom of the individual which are paramount doctrines of our faith."

Earlier, the convention asked revision of the neutrality act in order to distinguish between "treaty-keeping and treaty-breaking nations;" lauded the United States' stand in refusing to recognize the legality of Germany's conquest of Czecho-Slovakia; re-emphasized its abhorrence of war and suggested consultation, conciliation and arbitration as methods of peaceful solution.

Rabbi Brickner's report decried the activities of Father Coughlin, "who, following the example of the leaders of the National Socialist movement of Germany, has seen fit to exploit the term of social justice and to use it as a cloak under whose cover to promote racial and religious prejudice."

"He serves to disunite the people of our country and undermine our democratic institutions," the report said.

Middle Course Urged

A middle course between laissez faire and totalitarian trends was seen as the "only possible way out" of America's economic problems. An economic advisory council representing industry, agriculture, labor and the Government was advocated to "preserve all the benefits of individual enterprise within the limit of social well-being."

Principle of the wages-and-hours law and mandatory application of Social Security provisions to employes of religious and social welfare institutions also were approved.

In reporting for the Committee on International Peace, Rabbi Nathan Stern, of New York, told the rabbis that the present neutrality law imperils peace for America since it "represents an attitude of impossible isolation and of moral indifference, which, if unchanged, makes certain the further spread of international lawlessness." He assailed the cash-and-carry clause of the present act as "good business," but "hardly good form from the standpoint of higher ethics."

At the conference services in Washington Hebrew Congregation last night, Rabbi William H. Fineshriber, of Philadelphia, appealed to all Jews to unite in the "war against intolerance," and urged them not to become dismayed at the "recent recrudescence of barbarism in Europe."

"This throwback to medievalism cannot endure," he maintained.

"The spiritual Armageddon is at hand when the forces of Judiaism and Christianity, manifest in Western civilization, will overthrow the beast."

While Sane and Insane Languish

Prejudices Threaten D. C. Lunacy Solution

Normal and Abnormal Persons Are Confined In Gallinger; Experts Are at Odds, All Claiming Patients' Welfare at Heart

By Gerald G. Gross

Petty differences over jobs and personalities are holding up, and threaten to sabotage, a sound solution of the District's lunacy commitment problem while victims of the snarl languish in the overcrowded psychopathic ward of Gallinger Hospital, many of them strapped to their beds in nineteenth century fashion.

In a canvass of the situation yesterday, The Post uncovered considerable evidence that personal prejudices are obstructing the issue, with experts arrayed against one another and all claiming they have the welfare of the patient at heart.

Many were questioned but, due to the aforementioned personal angles and the fact that several proposed amendments to the existing law are pending in the Budget Bureau, which demands secrecy, only a few of them may be quoted.

Vreeland Determined

One of these is Representative Vreeland (Republican), of New Jersey, who said he is determined to have his bill, which would abolish the Mental Health Commission, called up in the House on the next District day, June 26.

Another is H. Mason Welch, chairman of the special investigating committee of the District Bar Association, who gave the opinion the present commission system should be continued, with a few alterations.

The third and last is Stanley H. Fischer, recently acting chairman of the same committee, who seconded Welch's views, adding that elimination of the present 10-day detention period at Gallinger before adjudication is the main thing needed to make the commission plan satisfactory to everybody.

Outgrowth of Inquiry

Opinions to one side, facts unearthed yesterday are as follows:

The corporation counsel's office has drafted and the District Commissioners have forwarded to the Budget Bureau a set of amendments to the present year-old commitment law which is designed to abolish evils that led to introduction of the Vreeland bill. This bill was an outgrowth of a Congressional inquiry last winter into overcrowding and deplorable conditions of patient-handling in Gallinger's psycopathic department.

While the Budget Bureau was considering these suggested changes, Welch's bar association committee, in co-operation with the medical profession, was preparing a separate set of amendments for submission to Representative Vreeland.

The bar group, from what could be learned yesterday, had no knowledge that the Budget Bureau already was studying suggested amendments.

Technically, the difference between the two sets of proposed changes is that the one coming from the District Building would amend the existing law and that originating with the lawyer-doctor group would amend Vreeland's pending bill.

However, both drafts, it can be said with certainty, will provide for continuance of the Commission on Mental Health, which Vreeland would like to see abolished.

"When I Come Up for Lunacy"

"When I come up for a lunacy hearing, which will be necessary after I get through with this commitment business, I don't want it to be before any commission," Vreeland joshed yesterday.

"The other day I made a surprise visit to the Gallinger psychopatic ward and had a look around. I saw violent patients, put in the same room as sane, quiet persons under observation, who had been strapped to their beds for from 30 to 120 days. I approached one such man who yelled at me, 'I'm going to kill you,' and as he strained to get me the straps cut into his wrists so that they bled.

"I asked Dr. Gilbert (Joseph L., chief psychiatrist and District alienist) whoy such patients were kept here so long, and he said they were awaiting action by the commission. I asked if there wern't padded cells, or something, for this kind of case, not only for their protection but for the protection of quiet patients, and the answer was no.

"If the mental health commission moves so slowly that such conditions must prevail, it ought to be done away with. If a commission must be retained, then I say make its psychiatrist-members full time."

Doctors on Part Time

Under the present setup, the single laweyr-member serves full time, but the doctors are appointed by the court on a part-time basis.

Vreeland said plainly that the commission plan was born in the Corporation Counsel's office to provide a job for T. Gillespie Walsh, the lawyer-chairman. The latter feels that the New Jersey Congressman is out to "get" him and, in the meantime the conditions at Gallinger, which everyone concedes are medeival, continue unrectified.

On the word of a Federal psychiatrist whose reputation is both international and unimpeachable and who is not interested in the personalitay equation, the existing commission system is "cumbersome" in some ways, "but it has succeeded in abolishing compulsory trials in open court and it ought to be given more than a year to prove its merits."

This doctor, whose name must be withheld, said that the amendments now before the Budget Bureau eliminate the universally despised 10-day detention period in overcrowded Gallinger and correct other failings of the present law.

The 10-day clause, which was insisted upon by the late Senator Copeland, is designed to give the person certified as insane by the commission an opportunity to decide whether he wants a court trial or not. Under the proposed amendments, this precaution against "railroading" would not be dropped; rather, the patient would spend the time in St. Elizabeth's Hospital, which is adequately manned and equipped not only to handle any type of case but to institute proper treatment early.

May Languish for Weeks

For example, a patient found to be suffering from paresis, sometimes called "softening of the brain," may languish for weeks—even months—in Gallinger, which lacks the facilities to treat this form of insanity; whereas if he were sent directly to St. Elizabeth's, treatment would be begun at once, without any waiting for legal processes.

Vreeland argues that his bill would slash the red tape. In this resepect, but opponents of the measure come back with the charge that it would also invest the District health officer—who does not figure in the present picture—with too much authority for one who is neither lawyer nor psychiatrist, increase the number of lunacy trials in open court and cost the District more money to administer, instead of less as claimed.

On Tuesday it will be a year since the commission on mental health was sworn into office. Prior to that time, the open court system of deciding on lunacy cases by judge and jury was compulsory here, a system which has been abolished by every State, except one.

In the last year the commission has disposed of 1,040 lunacy cases, out of which there were only 39 demands for jury trials by patients or their kin. Of this number, the commission's recommendations were upheld in 28 cases and reversed in ten, the jury disagreeing in the remaining instance.

Costs $1.80 Per day

Suporters of the commission, answering Vreeland's arguments that its abolition would have District taxpayers $23,000 a year in salaries and other expenses, counter with the asertion that the present system actually is the more economical because it cuts down court trial costs, prevents unnecessary admissions to St. Elizabeths and has increased the amount of colections from patients, or their families, committed to St. Elizabeths as District charges.

It costs the District government $1.80 a day for the bed and board of District patients in hte Federal institution. The Commission on Mental Health claims that its colections will be $6.00 a year higher than they used to be.

To the complaint that no hearings were held on the Vreeland bill before it was favorably reported by the House District Committee nearly two weeks ago, its sponsor replied that Chairman William H. King, of the Senate District Committee, has promised to conduct full hearings on that side of the Capitol when, and if, the measure gets that far.

While the legislative mill grinds slowly and seperate sets of amendments are being drawn to accomplish the same end and whispering continues that this job or that must be saved or abolished, the deliriously insane and the terrified sane continue to be quartered in the same rooms at Gallinger.

Capital News In Brief

A Beauty Nap

Pretty Peggy Townsend, 18, debutante cherry blossom queen who now sings at a night club, failed to appear in Traffic Court yesterday to answer a speeding charge because she overslept. The case was continued until Monday.

Motorcycle Policeman Clark Coleman stopped Miss Townsend on Connecticut avenue northwest last Monday. He charged her with driving 40 miles in a 25-mile zone. When she identified herself at the Eighth Precinct, and confessed that she did not have the necessary collateral, she was released to meet the policeman at court.

When she failed to answer, Judge Hobart Newman ordered that a warrant be issued. A few minutes later, Miss Townsend telephoned the court and stated she was on her way down. By that time court had adjourned and her case was reset for Monday.

D. C. Haven Closing

Chairman Randolph, of the House District Committee, yesterday introduced a bill to authorize State, county and city police to enter the District in "free pursuit" of persons believed to have committed felonies.

After arrest, offenders would be taken before a District Police Court judge, who would decide whether they should be held for extradition.

Ban on Fees Sought

A Congressional ban on admis-Mansion in Arlington Cemetery was proposed yesterday in a resolution introduced in the House by Representative Crawford (Republican), of Michigan.

Crawford said he had information that attendance at the national shrines had fallen off since Secretary Ickes put on the admission charges.

Motorcycle Policeman Richard O. Bankert, the District's one-man war against parking violators, last night surveyed his first week's work.

Moving back and forth on his motorcycle, he has passed out 225 tickets. He carries a long stick with a chalk tip, and has developed an effortless stroke for marking cars without stopping.

Census to Add 400 Clerks Here July 5

Peak of 7,000 Not Due Until 1941; All Must Be Hired From Civil Service

More than 400 additional clerks will report to work in the Census Bureau on July 5, it was learned yesterday. They represent the first influx of more than 150,000 persons who will be given employment by the 1940 decennial population survey.

The new employes were taken exclusively from civil service registers, in accordance with the law forbidding any other method of hiring for persons working at the Census' Washington headquarters. The peak employment here, which will total about 7,000 additional clerks, will not come until February or March, 1941—almost a year after the enumeration is completed.

500 Here by August 15

Census officials estimate that by the middle of August 500 employes will be added to the Washington staff. By April 1, 1940, the beginning of the enumeration, new employes here will number between 800 and 1,000.

The new group, which will consist of stenographers, typists, clerks and draughtsmen, will be occupied in defining the limits of 140,000 enumeration districts throughout the Nation.

"Trial Survey" in Indiana

In the field, 150,000 enumerators and 450 supervisors may be appointed for 10 to 15 days' work without regard to civil service regulations. Next year the hiring will take place within six months of the 1940 Presidential elections and is expected, as in the past, to give rise to charges of politically motivated appointments.

The Census Bureau has scheduled a "trial survey" to be held in August in a representative Indiana county to determine the practicability of the questionnaire. A trial agricultural census already has been taken.

Class Periods Increased for Junior Highs

School Day, However Will Stay the Same Under Board's Plan

A new plan whereby junior high school class periods will be lengthened so that part of the period can be devoted to supervised study, was approved yesterday at the meeting of the District Board of Education.

Tested for three years at Alice Deal Junior High and recommended by the junior high school principals, the program, to start in September, calls for increasing the present 43-minute class periods to 55 minutes. The length of the school day will not be increased, however, since the number of periods will be reduced.

The longer periods will be divided into instruction and study sessions, thus improving study and easing home work.

Divisions Reorganized

The first, third and fifth divisions of elementary schools were reorganized to equalize the number of pupils in each division.

After investigation, the board decided that non-residents can continue enrolling at Woodrow Wilson High School, but that new non-resident pupils would not be allowed to enroll in classes 7A and 7B at Alice Deal Junior High due to crowded conditions.

The proposed course in physical education for junior high schools and the continuance of health instruction were also approved by the board. Summer school principals were appointed and three members of the board, recently reappointed, were sworn in. They were Mrs. Philip Sidney Smith, John Wilson and C. Melvin Sharpe.

'Juarez' Is Held Second Week at Earle

Muni, Davis, Aherne Stars of Picture; Stage Bill Continues

Film-making at its finest is "Juarez," the Earle Theater's fifth holdover in ten years.

The skill that wove this many-faceted tale of Mexican American and European politics so tightly together is certainly one of the proudest achievements of the still-growing art. That it pleases those whose chief goal in film-going is entertainment and has, besides, a magnificent appeal to the cinema-addict who prefers a brain tonic with his amusement makes it one of the really fine films.

To most of us, Juarez and the history of Mexico are unfamiliar, although we may have a smattering of American and European problems of the middle nineteenth century. The problem, then, for Mr. Muni and the Brothers Warner was to make us want to hear about Benito Juarez and his struggle for true democracy, at a time when the United States were at war among themselves.

They have poised the sharply hewn questions brilliantly. Juarez is seen as the uncompromising democrat whose aims are quite the same as the beneficent autocrat. For both, the halfway point would be a satisfactory meeting place, but the hard-ridden Mexican, almost admiring his Austrian opponent, sees beyond the horizon. There can be no compromise. The people must rule themselves. While they may not help themselves so much as one inspired leader, they never will be under a tyran't will.

Brian Aherne Scores

The nineteenth century background for this 1939 problem is splendidly drawn.

We see the court of Napoleon III and Eugenie in Paris. He is an upstart Bonaparte and, to bring a treacherous, empirical dream into nearer reality, he strives for an opening in the Monroe Doctrine. The American Civil War is ending and he knows that Washington will soon have time for other things. He and his crafty ministers draft the idealistic young Archduke Maximilian, of the Austrian house of Hapsburg. Blond and handsome, the archduke is led to believe a Mexican plebiscite has chosen him as Emperor and, with his ambitious wife, the Belgian Carlota, he plans measures for "the greatest good of the greatest number."

But he learns of the Bonaparte treachery and the angry Carlota rushes to frighten the third Napoleon into giving them help. The courage of Maximilian, the unyielding firmness of Juarez and the mental breakup of the taut Carlota climax this telling and forceful parable.

Paul Muni is undeniably fine as the patriot, but Brian Aherne is superb as the archduke who became Emperor. Physically looking the character, the Irish actor draws courage and simplicity from a part that might be mawkish and insipid.

Colorful Stage Show

Bette Davis, too, is at her best in her accustomed character of a woman, ambitious, but feminine, and the camera shot of the distraught Carlota, going out of a door to enter an enveloping blackness, to wander alone, makes a truly memorable scene.

The score of Erich Wolfgang likewise brings imagination to a story that is told lavishly by accomplished and noted players. Claude Rains, John Garfield, Donald Crisp, Joseph Calleia, Gale Sondergaard, Gilbert Roland, Pedro de Cordoba, Montagu Love, Robert Warwick and Lewis Calhern are some of the outstanding actors in this film.

The accompanying stage show—also held over—is brief, appropriate and colorful.

The theme is Spanish and Mexican, introduced by Earline King and the recurring "La Paloma." Glen Pope, "The Find of the Month," is a slick trickster, who knows how to make a birdcage disappear, but who can still take a few lessons in cigarette magic from the peerless Cardini. Barr and Estes are limber, funny folk, and the Virginians sing rhythmical melodies of below the Rio Grande.

The Earle Roxyettes bring the stage bill to a climax, with costumes that are striking, and a swirling dance that is in this well-trained and attractive group's best tradition.

RICHARD L. COE.

RKO-Keith's

The sun never sets on "The Mikado" and RKO-Keith's is seeing to it that, despite the troubles of contemporary Japan, lovers of the town of Titipu have no further to go for the familiar melodies than Fifteenth street.

This Technicolor version of the Gilbert and Sullivan classic, with the D'Oyly Carte Players, is no longer news. The only auslander of the company, Kenny Baker, of the American air-lanes, has the role of Nanki-Poo and accredits himself satisfactorily. His light tenor is well adapted to the Sullivan melodies.

Martyn Green and Sidney Granville are familiar figures to E street theatergoers of the last several years and, to their respective roles of Ko-Ko and Pooh-Bah, they bring that authority so unique to the members of the London company.

The orchestral background is played by the London Symphony, under the direction of Producer Geoffrey Toye, employing the original score available only to the D'Oyly Carte Company.

The screen "Mikado" boasts movement that is new to the operetta and with the ever increasingly efficient Technicolor, achieves a delicacy of color that is most refreshing.

"Donald's Cousin Gus," a Walt Disney creation; the Pathe News and a short on the Marines complete the bill.

Stage Cast

At least three members of the original cast of the successful Broadway stage show, "What a Life," today had parts in the movie version which Ted Reed is directing, with Jackie Cooper as the star. Betty Field, Vaughan Glaser and James Corner have already been signed by Paramount.

Claudette Colbert, James Stewart Hit in 'Wonderful World,' Capitol

Star in Goofy Detective Comedy; Support Is Tops; Double Stage Bill

"IT'S A WONDERFUL WORLD." Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of an original story by Ben Hecht and Herman J. Mankiewicz, adapted to the screen by Mr. Hecht, costarring Claudette Colbert and James Stewart, with Guy Kibbee, Nat Pendleton, Frances Drake, Edgar Kennedy, Ernest Truex, Richard Carle, Cecilia Callejo, Sidney Blackmer, Andy Clyde, Cliff Clark, Cecil Cunningham, Leonard Kibrick, Hans Conreid and Grady Sutton. Directed by W. S. Van Dyke, 2d. Previewed Tuesday, June 13. At Loew's Capitol Theater.

Just as we suspected from our earlier preview of the picture, the audience that filled Loew's Capitol Theater yesterday afetrnoon howled at the hilarious lunacy of "It's a Wonderful World."

JELL "Thin Man" groove, in the matter of mystery. this subject bowls along at a swift pace, compiles laughs in great profusion by its very absurdity and, at the end, leaves its spectators more or less limp, even in an air-cooled theater.

Possessing a little of the flavor of "It Happened One Night," on the comedy side, and a suggestion of all the murder - mystery plays that have fallen into the Willie Heyward, it seems, was a New York playboy with multiple marriages to his credit, a tremendous thirst and no patience with the social conventions. So he gets himself all tangled up in a murder case and is railroaded to prison with the electric chair as his next stop. On the way, however, he has put it in writing that he will pay Guy Johnson, private detective, $100,000 if he can clear him of the crime. Mr. Johnson is a brash young man who places no more value upon a mere hundred grand than he does upon both his eyes and his right arm. So he takes the case.

Boy Meets Girl

Before he gets very far with it, he is sentenced to prison as an accessory for having hidden Heyward from the law. He gets out of that very neatly by jumping off the prison train handcuffed to a dumb fly cop from headquarters. Then he meets the girl.

The girl is a lovely young poetess, apparently without a brain to her name, who decides, after much earlier resistance, that Guy is a nice guy who deserves to be aided in his admirable determination to run down the real murderer. What happens after that is a little too goofy to lend itself to detailed recapitulation in cold type, but it might be said that the whole solution of the case hinges on a half-dime. The first half was found at the scene of the crime; the second, presumably, is held by the guilty wretches who are after Willie Heyward's fortune of $10,000,000. That all works out, too, in the most insane manner possible. Insanity, by the way, probably is a normal state of mind in weather like this. So after trailing through an amazing succession of bizarre situations, including another murder in a summer theater in upstate New York, "It's a Wonderful World" justifies its title in the final fadeout and sends everybody home happy, if a little groggy.

James Stewart, with his deliberate methods and slow speech, and the vivacious Claudette Colbert, as the giddy poetess, who swears by her eyes, are happily costarred in the roles of Johnson and Edwina Corday. They turn in performances that keep things spinning at top speed all the way. In this worthy endeavor they have some pretty able assistance. Guy Kibbee, as "Cap" Streeter, Guy's business partner; Edgard Kennedy and Nat Pendleton, as two mental delinquents from the plain clothes squad; Frances Drake and Sidney Blackmer, as the homicidal duo intent on the $10,000,000; Ernest Truex, as Heyward; Richard Carle, Cecilia Callejo, Andy Clyde, Cliff Clark, Cecil Cunningham and Grady Sutton all demonstrate their ability to cope with the requirements of Author Ben Hecht's mild aberrations and Woody S. Van Dyke's trip-hammer direction.

Two-Ply Stage Bill

There is a two-ply stage bill at the Capitol this week, the first half featuring clever specialties of the present era; the second, a group of "old-timers," dating back, some of them, to the 80s.

The Reynold Skaters, eight intrepid young women on rollers, open the bill, with those fabulous "drunks"—one of whom turns out to be a woman—Frank and Jean Hubert, scoring in the deuce spot. Mark Ballero, impersonator, brought down the house yesterday in character impressions that ranged from mediocre to superlative, and Doris Dupont, a diminutive tap dancer, wound up completely on the credit side.

For the oldsters, Bert Walton, by way of being a bit of a veteran himself, took command up to the point where Corinne, the Shirley Temple of her day, assumed the chore of mastering the ceremonies. Walton is always dryly humorous and Corinne invariably full of pep. She introduced such "ancients" as Harry Spurl, buck-and-wing dancer; Hi-Tom Ward, 81-year-old minstrel tenor, whose voice is remarkably preserved; James Quinn, acrobatic dancer, and herself in some of her old songs. All very diverting and nostalgic. Those rhythm rockets assist in both sections of the revue.

But the outstanding artiste of them all is Yvette Rugel, brilliant prima donna, whose operatic soprano yesterday was revealed in a wide range of numbers that were flawlessly sung. A vote of thanks to Billy Rose for having brought Miss Rugel out of retirement.

Prof. Lampkin's spirited overture and the Fox Movietone News complete an ace hot-weather bill.

She traveled from Hollywood to Albany by train and then sneaked into Manhattan by taking the Albany night boat to New York.

MOVIE DEPT.: Arch Selwyn is the producer from whom Sam Goldwyn patterned half of his name. Goldwyn, whose name was Goldfish, dropped the "fish" part and adopted the "wyn" part of Selwyn's name . . . Arch went to the Goldwyn studios and told the secretary that he wished to see Mr. Goldwyn . . . "Im too busy now," Sam insisted. "Tell Mr. Selwyn I'll see him tomorrow." . . . Selwyn secured entrance, however, by stating to the secretary: "Then tell that guy to give me back my name."

POLITICS DEPARTMENT: Ish-Ti-Opi, the Choctaw Indian who entertained for the King and Queen at Hyde Park, visited the Riviera and told this story to Frank Paris, the puppeteer there: Ish-Ti-Opi's robe was decorated with figures which looked like swastikas . . . The Indian explained that this was a legendary tribal symbol for the Thunder Bird, God of Rain . . . President Roosevelt said: "I wish some one else could explain the swastika that easily"—but King George remained regally silent.

BUSINESS DEPT.: Chester Erskine directed the production of "Burlesque," starring Clifton Webb and Libby Holman, which opened Monday night at the Chapel Theater in Great Neck . . . In addition to directing the show, Erskine helped in the costuming, lighting, painting the stage sets, etc. . . . Fifteen minutes before the opening he still was on stage cleaning up the final details . . . "Whew!" he finally announced, "I'm glad that's over. I can do nothing more." . . . Down the aisle came two young ushers carrying their bow-ties. "Mr. Erskine," they asked, with some hesitation, "we don't know how—so will you knot our ties?"

FINANCE DEPARTMENT: When Thornton Wilder worked for United Artists he lived two miles away from the studio, but walked to and from his office every day . . . A United Artists official finally approached him and suggested: "People are beginning to talk about you. It isn't nice for you to be seen walking to work. We're arranging to get you a car" . . . "But I don't want a car," Wilder protested . . . "Why not?" he was asked . . . "Because," he explained, "then I wouldn't be able to walk—and I like to walk."

LOCAL NEWS: County Judge Brancato has appeared before the Brooklyn Grand Jury . . . Benefit for the Amer. Comm. for Christian-German Refugees was held at the Winter Garden . . . The dummy edition of "P. M." will be ready in three weeks. It will contain the news as of April 26. In that dummy edition the editors will show just how they expect to handle news—and boil down the 300,000 words of the N. Y. Times foreign and domestic news to 4,000 words.

SPORTS DEPARTMENT: Jack Dempsey, who won the world's heavyweight championship from Jess Willard in Toledo on July 4, 1919, will meet Willard in Toledo again on July 4 of this year. It will be in commemoration of the twentieth anniversary of their fight.

MUSIC DEPT.: Last week Irving Berlin visited the Musicians Room upstairs at the Center Theater, where the music for "The American Way" was piped through to the theater . . . As a special treat, Berlin was invited to conduct one of the numbers, "The Stars and Stripes Forever." . . . "You made some mistakes," a member of the orchestra later pointed out . . . "I'm not so sure about that," Berlin replied. "I thought I did it just the way Sousa did."

BOOK DEPARTMENT: "You published an item about Thomas Wolfe, and the phrase, 'You Can't Go Home Again,'" writes Edward C. Aswell of Harper and Brothers. "As Wolfe's last editor, I had a great many talks with him and heard him use the phrase time and again, but he never told me its origin. The first of Wolfe's posthumous novels, which we'll publish this month, is 'The Web and the Rock.' This novel ends with the sentence 'You can't go home again!'—and that phrase is the title of Wolfe's second posthumous novel."

ILLUSTRATED SECTION: Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr., was disturbed yesterday when he saw the published photographs showing him with a black patch over his eye . . . One of those photos had been taken at El Morocco by Jerome Zerbe . . . Yesterday when Roosevelt—accompanied by Brenda Frazier, Bruce Cabot and Mrs. Jock Whitney—went to El Morocco, Zerbe asked them to pose again, "any way you want." . . . "Well, here's the way I want it," Roosevelt said—placed Zerbe at his table and took the picture himself . . . Miss Frazier, Mr. Cabot and Mrs. Whitney then took turns at operating the camera—all with Zerbe as the subject.

Thrilling Film Of the Air Is Back at Met.

Grant and Arthur Star in Romantic Adventure Story

Though "Only Angels Have Wings," many of the players in this high-flying cinema show the pin-feathers of stars. They're no cherubs nor seraphs. They're the gallant generation of flying humans, inexorably devoted to the "bright face of danger," loving peril as a mistress, meeting gally the Last Big Guess in sunshine or moonshine (latter preferred).

This latest contribution to the hard-boiled gaiety of aviating is definitely descriptive of reality. The fliers are not decked out in fancy raiment, nor is the airport a place of futuristic luxury as envisioned by a scenario writer.

Our heroes (many) and our heroines (two) are placed in the murky atmosphere of a South American banana port (and, often, there are no bananas), with the overhanging dangers of sudden death and too-long hangovers figuring as exemplary antidotes.

Stars Really Shine

Jean Arthur shines with table-cut brilliance in this one. The little Arthur is a bit on the mental side, naturally, but she is mighty human and sweet as the little roving vaudevillian who suddenly goes nuts about Cary Grant and "can't do anything about it."

There's something almost Hemingwayish about the plot development of "Only Angels Have Wings." Something honest and cold and warm-hearted, at the same time; something modern and primeval, giving the blush to Victorianism and Coolidgeism.

Return of the fabulous Dick Barthelmess to the screen is the big news of "Only Angels Have Wings." Not that Stars Cary Grant and Jean Arthur don't do a swell job. They are splendid all the way. But Barthelmess brings in the quality of imagination in his role of the flier who has been a rotter and then goes over the deep end to redeem himself. His portrayal is infinitely touching. He is like a dead man who strives to come to life in his pathetic endeavor to appear like a man, in the face of universal contempt.

Mitchell Scores Again

But to Thomas Mitchell go other great laurels in addition to those he has already garnered this year. Ol' Tom, as in "Stagecoach," gives you a characterization that will twist your heartstrings into sailors' knots. He rates the biggest "Oscar" of Hollywood's year, and one studded with star sapphires.

The shorts of the Metropolitan program are generous and well done. There's a "Swing Session" by Leith Stevens, a cartoon dealing with polar bear complications en famille, no end refreshing. The news-sports reel has a refreshing summer sparkle. You'll be tempted to stay in the Met to see it over. If there's room, without hurting your conscience about other patrons. Because they sure are crowding in to witness the second session of "Only Angels Have Wings."

MARY HARRIS.

Columbia

"Young Doctor Kildare" has all the ingredients necessary for enjoyable hot-weather entertainment, with Lionel Barrymore barytoning through one of his memorable roles as counselor of the young.

Barrymore is resident physician in a hospital and Lew Ayres is the young interne who learns doctoring under his grim tutelage. The older man thinks the younger one should be chucked in the lake of life and stands on the sidelines to see if he sinks or swims.

That Ayres almost drowns and nearly drags the hospital in with him contributes to the more or less spirited tempo of the proceedings. There are a couple of girls connected with the splashing, a pretty nurse, good, and a glamour girl, bad. The good girl and the good precepts of the elder doctor triumph over the lures of the naughty girl.

Barrymore has one flashing sentence about the invisible wounds by which men die. The dialogue is away above par. If Max Brand, author of the story, is responsible for the bright chatter, then the praise belongs to him.

Two shorts, both badly photographed, yet both having a kernel of originality often missing in two-reelers, have to do with a troupe of dancers and a jitterbug professor of chemistry. Truman Talley performs in the former. Triumphantly the King and Queen bow through the newsreel.

Larry Crabbe Will Become a Realtor

Larry "Buster" Crabbe, aquatic champion and film star, is going into the real estate busines, he said recently.

Crabbe, currently featured in "Unmarried," revealed that he will soon subdivide his large ranch at Crestline, Calif., nine miles south of Lake Arrowhead, into small acreages for summer homes.

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, June 16.—Looking remarkably young, D. W. Griffith, who did more for the advancement of motion pictures than any other director or producer, is now in Hollywood. He visited Frank Capra's set and all the "Senators" recruited from the stars of yesterday for "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington," rushed to shake the master's hand. He was impressed with Jimmy Stewart, who, he said, reminded him of Bobby Harron, his most important male star, when Lillian and Dorothy Gish and Mae Marsh were headliners.

LOUELLA PARSONS

D. W. has already written 80,000 words of his biography, and what a history of the movies that will make! I was curious to know which of his pictures he liked best—thinking, of course, he would say "Birth of a Nation." But "Intolerance" is his favorite, because, he says, it contains a social message important even today. When we go back, we remember it was D. W. who first used the screen for more than mere entertainment.

That catchy George Gershwin melody, "I Got Rhythm," comes back to me as I think of "Girl Crazy," the show which brought Ginger Rogers to the attention of the movie moguls. We'll all probably be hearing it again in the movies, for M.-G.-M. wants it and is now dickering with RKO for the privilege of filming the musical comedy. The deal is so near set that Eddie Cantor has already been approached for the starring role. As I recall it, Eddie wasn't in the original stage play. But the old memory gets faulty sometimes and I may be wrong. If I am, correct me!

Republic's doing all it can to keep John Wayne happy, and they must be succeeding, for today he put his John Hancock on a new contract and a new assignment to star in "Wagons Westward." Seems like I've heard that title a couple of hundred other time, but, be that as it may, Republic is going to town financially on this story, laid in Civil War days and concerning a young Western frontiersman. It's scheduled to start September 15, just as soon as John finishes his loan-out to R. K. O. Undoubtedly, it's Republic's generosity in letting young Wayne make outside pictures that has kept him satisfied with his contract there.

Georgie Jessel telephoned me just before he flew back East this afternoon. He said he had visited Norma Talmadge for two hours and was hopeful they might bridge their difficulties. He said he was remorseful that, because he had worked so hard, Norma had been left alone too much and he blamed himself for their present heartache. Georgie is coming back August 1 to make a picture, "It Happened at the World's Fair," for Twentieth, commuting here and back to New York to keep his engagements there. He said he felt if no divorce action was started, that he and Norma had a chance of getting together again.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Nice of Johnny Weissmuller to see that Georgia Coleman's mother was able to get to her daughter's bedside. They were both Olympic champions at one time; Bette Davis is so proud of her Uncle Stanley Woodward's paintings, that she is sponsoring a private exhibition of them; the Jules Steins having paid rent for two years, will now build their own home; Raoul Walsh, back from fishing, reports the fish very unfriendly; the Sol Wurtzel party postponed because the guest of honor, Jean Rogers Winkler, was down with flu; Margaret Lockwood and husband, Rupert Leon, and the British comedian, Will Fyffe, and Mrs. F., doing the concessions at the Venice amusement park; Judy Garland celebrated her 16 years of freedom by stepping out at the Cocoanut Grove with Frankie Thomas.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., June 16.—Come what may, don't miss "The Mikado." It's sparkling, tiltivating, done in sophisticated color. Subtle, and it's only been running successfully since 1885. But this is the first time, to my knowledge, they've ever put it on the screen. And England did it.

HOPPER

True, our own Victor Schertzinger directed it, and it's made a star of Kenny Baker. Here, we let him flip flapjacks as he did in "The Goldwyn Follies." His lyric voice melted into that music. A jitterbug back of me said: "Why, it's Disney with human beings." This old-timer moaned: "They've left out Katisha's solo."

On the credit list they forgot to put the name of Mme. Karinska, who designed the most superb costumes I've ever seen in color. Again England shows us the way. It's irresistible.

It was smart of John Charles Thomas to postpone his opening until the show was ready. And why shouldn't he? He's too big an artist to be done in by Hollywood.

Linda Ware uses Deanna Durbin's stand-in, Dotty Coffey, who sees all, hears all, says nothing. The other day when Teacher Rachael Smith was giving Linda her lessons, she said: "Where's your stand-in? Why isn't she here?"

Roger Peacock Wins Mid-Atlantic Golf Title

★★★ WASHINGTON: SATURDAY, JUNE 17, 1939 15

Nats Defeat Chisox, 5-2, Behind Kelley

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

The heavy privacy of the two-by-four cubicle marked "Umpires—Keep Out" was invaded at Griffith Stadium yesterday by a little bantam of a man who demanded entrance, brushed past the doorkeeper. If he had had to fight his way in, that could probably have been done also.

Because the intruder was Petey Sarron, former featherweight champion of the world.

POVICH

Inside the room, Petey looked about, scanned the faces of the three American League umpires, walked up to a swarthy fellow in a blue cap and suit, and said "Hello, Steve. You don't remember me, never saw me before, but I'm your cousin, Petey Sarron."

And cousins they are, first cousins, despite the fact that Sarron never knew of the kinship until a few weeks ago. Brother and sister are his dad and Basil's mother, emigrants from Syria on the same boat 30-odd years ago. But the cousins, one of whom reached the big leagues of the prize ring and the other the major leagues of baseball, were meeting for the first time.

Barron's unmarked features belied the fact that the night before he had fought 10 rounds with the tough Yucatan Kid in Richmond. He won that one, even as he has won all of his 11 fights since losing the world feather title to Henry Armstrong, a pretty good man, 18 months ago in New York. But Sarron is ready to quit the ring.

Petey's Financial Worries Are Over

He's fighting only whenever he feels like it nowadays. A bout every couple of months, or so. He can still make more money fighting than at anything else, he says. But this will be his last year in the ring. His folks are pretty well fixed now, Petey says, and if he has a financial worry in the future he estimates it will be his own fault.

"I've got enough real estate in Birmingham, Ala., to see me through nicely if I don't ever throw another glove," Petey was saying. "It came the hard way, but that's all right. My jaw was broken in the first professional fight I had. I've had my nose broken, three ribs fractured, and the night I won the world featherweight title from Freddie Miller here in Washington, I broke a bone in my elbow and it ruined my golf game. But I put some money away for myself and my folks, and that's a comfort."

He estimates that he made about $200,000 with his fists since turning pro after the 1924 Olympics when he was first alternate to Fidel LaBarba as the United States flyweight. He got $64,000 of it in big chunks for his six fights in South Africa after winning the title from Miller. It was tax free, too, under his agreements with the promoters, and he brought it all back to America. His title fight with Armstrong fetched him a $15,000 guarantee.

"Course, I had my expenses," Petey was saying. "I had to train, and pay sparring partners and all that. And my manager Jimmy Irwin, had his cut, too. I never could see why a manager was entitled to the usual 33 per cent of a fighter's earnings, and I never paid Irwin that much. I gave him 25 per cent, though, and he was worth it."

"The worst thing that ever happened to me was that Armstrong fight," said Petey. "I was selling my title for $15,000 and I knew it. I knew I couldn't make 126 pounds at 2 o'clock without nearly killing myself, but I did it. I went into a steam room for an hour and a half and jumped rope to take off a pound and a half just before the fight. I was limp when that fight started, but it's no alibi. A pretty good man licked me."

Doubts if Any Boxer Likes to Fight

Petey doubts if any fighter likes to fight. He says frankly, he never did. "The day of a fight, I'd pray for rain or anything that would cause a postponement. I just didn't like the idea of fighting a fellow I wasn't mad with. The few minutes before the opening gong always have been pretty terrible ones for me. Of course, though, when that bell sounds, it's different. There's no backing out, and the thing you want to do most is win.

"It used to be a bit different when I started as a fighter. I'd train for weeks in a gym, perfect a fast jab, and then when I got it, I'd be happy and start thinking of the great things I was going to do with it. But after a certain amount of success in the ring, you sort of lost your zest for it. For the last half-dozen years I've been fighting for the quick money in it and because my friends wanted to see me win a title beore I was through."

Sure, Petey'll be at the ringside on the 28th of the month when Joe Louis and Tony Galento crawl through the ropes. He's not so sure Galento hasn't got a chance to win that one, he says.

"Anybody who has ever been hit with a stiff punch knows enough not to count Galento out of it yet. Nothing is so decisive as a hard sock on the chin and everybody knows Galento can hit. Sure, Louis figures to win, but if he plays it smart he'll box Galento for a couple of rounds, jab him silly and then knock him out. He wouldn't be smart to try any quick knockout stuff on Tony. If Louis comes in punching and Tony whaps him with that left hook in an exchange, the guy on the floor might be Louis, no kidding."

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, June 16.—The United States polo team beat England's squad, 11-7 and 9-4, in the first two games of their three-game series for the International Polo Challenge Cup. Sunday the boys play again, but at the request of the English captain the Americans will handicap themselves ten goals. The English team will take the field leading 10-0, and the American combination of Tommy Hitchcock, Mike Phipps, Stewart Iglehart and Cecil Smith will have eight chukkers in which to catch up.

CONSIDINE

Why don't the Yankees do that?

They'll have to come to it eventually, if their multiple farm system continues to develop replacements like DiMaggio, Gordon and Keller. Eventually people are going to tire of seeing them play teams like the Browns, from whom they've won seven straight games; the Athletics, from whom they've won eight, and the White Sox, from whom they've won six out of seven. Until Ossie Vitt screwed up his courage the other day and daringly permitted Bobby Feller to pitch against them, the Yanks had beaten the Indians seven out of eight times.

Four 10-Goal Men on Present Team

Polo has a fine workable system of handicapping. A player starts out with a rating of no goals. Through the years he gains promotions, given to him by coldly impartial officials steeped in the lore of the game. Even if he has great talent it takes him perhaps ten years to reach his top rating. There have been only six ten-goal players in the history of American polo—and to give you some idea of the strength of the current American team, four of them are on it.

Most polo games are handicap affairs. The handicaps of each team's players are added, the smaller figure is subtracted from the larger and the weaker team is given as many goals as there is difference between their goal-rating and the goal-rating of the favorites. The total goal-rating of the American team Sunday will be 40, as opposed to England's 30—hence the ten-goal start the Britons will enjoy. It's bound to be a better game, because of this handicap, just as it would be better entertainment if the Yanks would spot their average American League rival with three or four runs a game.

Baseball handicaps could be worked out on the basis of a team's performance the preceding week; the injuries or well-being of the players; the presence or absence of a great pitcher in the box; the proximity of the right field fence if the team is studded with left-handed hitters, and a dozen other things that look complicated here but—in the case of the Yankees—would make for more entertaining baseball.

Choice Old Myth Exploded

Ty Cobb has exploded a choice old myth. For nearly a decade, now, he has been credited (or rather discredited) with having turned thumbs down on Carl Hubbell. Cobb was Hub's first big league manager.

It is a commonly accepted story that Cobb didn't have the perspicacity to see Hub's dormant greatness, and it is also held that he advised him against monkeying around with the screwball.

Here's Cobb's version:

"I was Carl Hubbell's foremost backer, when he first came up. I never saw a kid with more stuff on the ball than he had. But I never saw a wilder one, either, so I sent him to Toronto for seasoning. Well, it din't seem to help his control much. I remember that once I took the Tigers up there to play an exhibition against Toronto. Hubbell was pitching, and he was so wild that I asked Dan Howley to take him out of the box. I was afraid he'd brain one of my ballplayers.

"Toronto sent him to the Texas League the next year, and the Texas League team let him go to another club in the same league. That's how Detroit really lost him, and I wasn't even manager of the team then. George Moriarty was. I'll tell you this much, too, and I know Hubbell will verify what I say: Hub never threw a screwball in my presence. I don't think he had one until a year or two after I lost sight of him."

Griffs Take Early Lead, Coast Home

Veteran, in First Start, Allows 10 Hits but Doesn't Issue Any Walks

By Shirley Povich.

The Nats dusted off Harry Kelley yesterday, shook the moths out of his pitching arm and sent the 33-year-old piece of pitching bric-a-brac against the White Sox in his first start since 1938. Result: Washington, 5; Chicago, 2.

The paunchy righthander, relegated to relief roles since the start of the season, did a competent job on the White Sox. He surrendered ten hits, but he didn't walk a batter and he made a 4-0 lead stand up nicely through nine innings of a sweltering, Ladies' Day afternoon. And the two runs he yielded spawned from chinks in the Nats' defense.

It began as a battle of the ancients, with Vic Frasier pitching for the White Sox. Frasier was coming back to the wars as a starting pitcher yesterday for the first time since 1934, when he did a brief stint for the Detroit Tigers before reverting to the minor leagues. He pitched himself into the showers in one inning.

Marcum Holds 'em

It was well that the Nats knocked Frasier loose from four runs in that first inning, because they had no such success with his successor, Johnny Marcum. Relieving Frasier with two out in the opening inning and choking off the Washington rally with the bases full, Marcum pitched one-hit ball for six innings and didn't yield a run to the Nats until the ninth.

But with Kelley turning back the White Sox, inning after inning, it was a breeze for the Nats. The chunky old fellow gave up a run in the fourth and sother in the eighth and that was all. And the Nats, apparently inspired, back him up with three double plays, with Budd Lewis starting a pair and Jimmy Bloodworth doing a superb middleman job.

Amid the shrieks of the 7,000 Ladies' Day guests, the Nats came out punching and won the game in the first inning before Manager Jimmy Dykes could warm up a second pitcher to replace the hapless Frazier, who was having no success whatsoever. Cecil Travis and Angelo Giuliani were the heroes of that first-inning uprising.

Case Gets Two Hits

Ten Nats went to bat in the first-inning merry-go-round, with George Case, the only Washington athlete to make two hits yesterday, touching off the spree with a single into centerfield. Cecil Travis breathed virility into the rally by whipping a three-bagger over first base into the rightfield corner, to score Case with the first run.

Travis languished on third while Lewis popped up, but he scampered home when Wright grounded out to Bejma. Estalella commenced matters anew by drawing a walk, and a single by Bloodworth and a walk to Prichard filled the bases with two out. In this crisis, Giuliani

A Cold Shower for a Red-Hot Middle-Atlantic Champ

Indian Spring Ace Defeats Hufty, 3 and 2

New Champion's Iron Shots Near Perfect As He Completes Rout of Field

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

One of the finest amateur golfers this section has produced, Roger Sylvester Peacock, Indian Spring's 28-year-old shotmaker, completed a rout of the thirty-fifth Middle Atlantic Championship yesterday at Chevy Chase by defeating Page Hufty, of the host club, 3 and 2, in the title round.

In a "comeback" role, after two years of little competition, Peacock was the class of the tournament from start to finish. With one or two exceptions, his wood and iron shots against Hufty were a picture of perfection. He was down the middle off the tee and on the pin all the way on his second shots. He needed par for a 69 when the match was over on the sixteenth green.

His final round showing was no exception. In a pro-amateur preceding the tournament he was on the winning team, with a 71. In two matches Thursday he won by 4 and 3 margins, two and one over par, respectively, and yesterday he trimmed Buddy Sharkey in the morning, 6 and 5, with a par performance, and for the benefit of a small gallery, held down by the heat in the afternoon, he matched par figures again.

Peacock entered the tournament as somewhat of an unknown quantity. His golf had been neglected for two years, but this spring, unknown to a majority of the local golf fans, he had been practicing in earnest for the local tournaments. He and a few friends knew he was hitting the ball about as well as ever, and he proved it. He'll enter the Maryland State Amateur next week as an odds-on choice.

Hufty Has Close Call

The first close match of the championship flight qualified Hufty as a finalist in the morning. While Peacock was two up at the third hole and five up at the eighth against Sharkey, Hufty was having a tough time against Baltimore's sole remaining representative, Spencer Overton.

They were even at the turn, after Overton held a two-hole margin at one time. They were even coming to the sixteenth, where Hufty was in the ditch twice, and lost the hole. He won the seventeenth when Overton was trapped, and on the eighteenth knocked a five-iron 8 feet from the cup and canned the putt for a birdie and victory, while Overton was down in a conservative par.

The spectators lost interest in the finals as early as the fourth hole, although Hufty made a gallant stand. Roger won the first with a par when Hufty chipped short, and after halving the second, the new champion dropped iron shots within 2 feet of the cup on the next two holes for birdies. One was so close Hufty conceded.

Peacock 4 Up

Peacock won the fifth for four up when Hufty was in trouble around the green, but lost his first hole by three-putting the sixth. They halved the eighth in bogey sixes, both in trouble, and Peacock turned four up with a par on the ninth while Hufty was twice in the flowerbed.

A pair of great chip shots netted a halved par on the tenth, and Hufty made a miniature comeback on the next two holes, winning 11 with a par when Roger pushed a spoon second, and 12 with a well-played birdie.

Peacock's third birdie of the round, again from a great second shot, won the fourteenth, and Hufty appeared to be out on the next but scrambled out of a trap and earned a par with an 8-footer. The sixteenth was halved in pars for the decision. It was the first time in the tournament Peacock had been taken as far as the sixteenth hole.

The tournament crowned a new champion, as neither had won the title before. Roger lost in the finals to Bobby Riegel in 1934, while Hufty had advanced to the semi-finals on two other occasions, losing to George Voigt and Harry Pitt.

Billy Shea won the championship flight consolation with a pair of 20-hole victories over Dick Melvin and Erford Barnes, while the star-

H. Dettweiler, 'Bea' Barrett In Golf Final

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, June 16.—The defending champion, 22-year-old amateur, and a young professional, 23-year-old, emerged today as the finalists in the Women's Western Open golf tournament to battle for the title in 36 holes of play tomorrow.

Beatrice Barrett, of Minneapolis, winner last year and finalist for the thrid straight time, ran away from Mrs. Sam Israel, of New Orleans, in their semifinal match 8 and 7.

In the other semifinal, Helen Dettweiler, of Washington, D. C., playing her first tournament as a professional, had a fight on her hands before she could down "the baby," 16-year-old Jeanne Cline, of Bloomington, Ill., 3 and 1.

Out in 42

Miss Dettweiler was out in 42 to lead 4-up at the turn, but little Jeanne rallied to win three successive holes.

The nerveless girl laid Miss Dettweiler a partial stymie at the tenth and won a 5 against the pro's 6. She went on to win the eleventh with a 4 and took the twelfth with a par 3 when Miss Dettweiler caught a trap.

Jeanne ran into trouble, however, on the thirteenth, and took a 7 to go 2 down again. The next three holes were halved, but the Washington professional was close to the seventeenth hole in 3, and Jeanne, lying 4, conceded the putt, hole and match.

Miss Barrett, playing her best golf of the tournament, was out in 39, 2 over women's par, ot take a 7 up lead over Mrs. Israel, who was having considerable difficulty with her game after playing excellently in the earlier rounds.

The defending champion made it 8 up on the tenth hole, when Mrs. Israel 3-putted the green. At the eleventh, Miss Barrett was on the green in 3, but missed her putt. She was dead on for a 5, and Mrs. Israel conceded.

Elmer Hackney Sets Two Shotput Marks

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, June 16.—University of Southern California's defending champion Trojans came through on schedule today to dominate preliminaries of the national collegiate track and field championships, but Shot Putter Elmer Hackney, of Kansas State grabbed individual honors.

The Trojan horde, aiming at its fifth consecutive N. C. A. A. title, moved into tomorrow's finals after winning 15 coveted places as the Nation's best college athletes performed under sunny skies before 6,000 fans.

Trailing Dean Cromwell's men of Troy, with 11 places, was Sanford, while strung out behind were the invading forces of Michigan, Pittsburg, Indiana, Washington State and other entries from the 28 States competing in this eighteenth annual tournament.

Torrance's Record Fails

Outstanding feat of the day was the shot putt of Hackney, the defending champ, who put the 16-pound ball 55 feet 10⅝ inches and broke the record set up by big Jack Torrance, of Louisiana State, in 1934, as well as Torrance's American record set in the same year.

The Torrance N. C. A. A. record was 54 feet 6 9-16 inches and the American 55 feet 5 inches.

Other champions and champions to be came up with expected heats in most cases, but today's heats were merely samples of what tomorrow promises, when the heat will be turned on.

Sprinter Mozel Ellerbe, of Tuskegee, defending 100-yard dash champion, captured his heat in 9.88 with little trouble from Troy's Mickey Anderson, while Clyde Jeffrey, of Stanford, and Tommy Nelson, of Fresno State, won their heats—Jeffrey in 9.7 and Nelson in 9.8. The trio clash in an intersectional.

John Woodruff, of Pittsburgh, competing here instead of in the Princeton Invitational—a fact that brought wide rverberations—won his 880 heat in handy fashion in 1 minute 53.4 seconds, and seemed in a fair way to retain his N. C. A. A. championship in the finals.

Findings Kept Dark On Lewis Eye Exam

Pittsburgh, June 16 (AP).—An eye specialist and two physicians today gave Light Heavyweight Champion John Henry Lewis a thorough physical examination for the National Boxing Association.

Harvey Boyle, Pennsylvania athletic commissioner, who had been delegated by the N. B. A. to arrange and supervise the examination, said he would forward the reports without reading them.

The N. B. A. wanted to determine whether Lewis was able to defend hi stitle. If he is able the association's officials said the former Phoenix, Ariz., Negro would have to arrange a title fight, and if he is unable the championship will be declared vacant.

Odds Shorten On California In Crew Race

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., June 16 (AP).—A University of California crew that has worked as a unit for four months tonight was established a prohibitive favorite at odds of 6 to 5 to win the 4-mile varsity race that will climax the forty-second regatta of the Inter-Collegiate Rowing Association on the Hudson River late tomorrow afternoon.

The Golden Bears, record breakers in their 6-length triumph over Washington in April, are almost as strong a choice as the Yankees to repeat in the American League. The question is not whether California will win, but who will finish second.

Navy, Cornell Second Choices

The odds makers rated Cornell, beaten only by Yale in sprint races, and Navy, last year's winner, as joint second choices at 2 to 1, and put Washington third at 3 to 1. After them come the longshots—Syracuse, 8 to 1; Columbia, a strong fourth in 1938, 10 to 1, and Wisconsin, 25 to 1.

California has been touted so highly that the big race virtually has been conceded, for publication purposes at least, by the other

Baron Von Cramm Denied Visa To Enter U. S. for Net Tourney

By the Associated Press.

Bristol, England, June 16.—Baron Gottfried von Cramm, Germany's refugee tennis star, said today he had been refused a temporary visa to enter the United States so that he could play in the American tennis championships at Forest Hills in September.

Eight months out of a Nazi jail to which he was sentenced on a morals charge, the baron said he hoped to be in top form by autumn and had planned to make his world comeback in the U. S. championships, September 7-16.

"I had reason to believe I would be welcome at Forest Hills," said Von Cramm, who is one of the world's most talented amateurs. "But when I applied for a temporary visa through U. S. Embassy officials in Germany it was rejected."

Von Cramm disclosed this only in

Handley High Wins Virginia Track Crown

Blacksburg, Va., June 16 (AP).—Handley High School regained the track and field championship of Virginia's vocational departments for the Winchester institution with a record breaking score of 34 points in Miles Stadium at Virginia Tech today.

King William High, defending champion, failed to score in fast competition that saw three new meet records established and another tied.

Handley took four of the ten events and set new marks in two of them.

The team scores:

Handley 34, Washington and Henry 28, Lincoln 19, Narrows 13, King George 8, Marriott, Worsham, Fairfax 6, Pamplin, Nokesville 5, Clintwood 4, Turbeville, Mount Jackson 3½, Varina, Haymarket, Madison, Hillsville 3, Saluda, Wicomico Church, New Market, Woodlawn 1.

District totals were northern Virginia 82½, Middle Virginia 37¼, Southwest Virginia 21, eastern Virginia 8.

Staunton Beaten By Salem, 9 to 4

Salem, Va., June 16 (AP).—Salem's hard-hitting Virginia League cellarites halted the league-leading Staunton club's winning streak at six straight here today, hammering out 11 hits, one a two-run homer by Mincy, for a 9 to 4 victory.

Lady Buck Wins Charles Town Feature; Dead Heat for 2d

A. Groucher, Brain Child Tie for Place

Winner Pays $6.20 Mutuel; Bernhardt Rides Victor; Daily Double Pays $104.20

By Walter Haight.

A Staff Correspondent.

Charles Town, W. Va., June 16.—Lady Buck, an honest 8-year-old mare, barely lasted long enough to win by a head in the running of the W. P. Packett Purse, the feature of the program here this afternoon. Ann Groucher and Brain Child ran a dead heat for second money.

Lady Buck, owned and trained by W. Royle, paid a $6.20 mutuel. The dead heat for second money caused the three money horses to pay less to place than to show.

The winner, who shares the record for the "about" 6 furlongs course with Consistent at 1:15 1-5, was two-fifths off that mark while racing over a fast track.

Apprentice Jockey R. Bernhardt had the mount on Lady Buck and he took her out of the gate in good fashion to have her on top at the important first turn. Ann Groucher was closest to the pace, with Brain Child well back at this point.

Along the back stretch, Lady Buck opened a wide gap and appeared headed for an easy victory. In fact, she had a two-length lead in the midstretch. With about 20 yards to go she suddenly tired. Her legs almost stopped as she staggered for the wire. On the inside, Jockey Woodrow Kirk drove Ann Groucher along and on the outside came Jockey Leon Garrett with Brain Child. However, Lady Buck's head was out at the end.

The program brought another good payoff in the daily double. Billie Dee Or, a $13.60 shot in the second race, and Justa Canter, paying $13, proved the right combination. Those who coupled Billie Dee Or and Justa Canter in the twin wager collected $104.20.

Miss Maker, 2-year-old champion here, added another victory to her growing string and paid the favorite players a $3 mutuel. Paper Girl and Nancy's Best, were closest at the finish line.

Washington and Baltimore Win Hotchkiss Cup Matches

Locals Beat Norfolk, 8-1; Finals Today

Baltimore Routs Richmond, 9-0; Deciding Match Looms as Toss-Up

Special Dispatch to The Post

Baltimore, June 16.—Virginia's entries in the annual Hitchkiss Cup matches were eliminated in preliminary competition today, leaving Baltimore and Washington to fight it out for the silver rtophy in the finals tomorrow.

Baltimore routed Richmond, 9-0, and Washington swamped Norfolk, 8-1, losing only the final doubles match at a time when the result made no difference.

Both having scored overwhelming victories in their first-round encounters Washington and Baltimore go into the finals this afternoon with neither regarded as a favorite. The district team which was won the cup 10 times in the 19 years of competition and for the last six years in succession, is weakened by the absence of two of its best players, Barney Welsh and Hugh Lynch.

Washington, captained by Dooley Mitchell, placed its singles players in this order: Davie Johnsen, Mitchell, C. Alphonso Smith, jr., Buddy Adair, Tom Mangan and Dick Murphy. All were victorious in straight sets.

In doubles, the No. 1 team was Smith and Murphy, the No. 2 team Johnsen and Mitchell, and the third combination Buddy Adair and Eddie Becker. This was the only one that lost, being defeated, 1—6, 6—4, 8—4, by Jack Mallory and Dick Spindle.

answer to a question about whether he would play in the American championships. He stressed the fact that he was not questioning nor complaining about the officials' decision.

The baron is paler and thinner than when he fought Don Budge in a great Davis Cup five-set match at Wimbledon in 1937 but he's still full of modest confidence.

There have been reports his entry was not accepted for the all-England championships at Wimbledon starting June 26 because of his jail sentence, but Von Cramm denied this and Wimbledon officials said he would have been very welcome.

May Live in Sweden

"I did not send in my entry for Wimbledon," he said, "because I am not yet playing very well. I'm trying to regain my game slowly and that will take several months of play in minor tournaments."

Von Cramm said he never had considered trying to immigrate to the United States.

"I'm planning to settle more or less permanently in Sweden," he said.

The baron has a job with a large Swedish sports manufacturing firm and he will in the future play for the Salk Club of Stockholm.

He is competing now in the west of England championships but will get his first real test next week in the Queens Club tournament in which England's H. W. (Bunny) Austin and the Americans, Bobby Riggs, Don McNeill and Elwood Cooke, also are entered.

Von Cramm Case Routine Business

By International News Service.

Baron Gottfried Von Cramm, German tennis star, one time imprisoned in Berlin, was refused a visa to enter this country, the State Department announced yesterday.

Von Cramm is now at Bristol, England. Officials here said the American consul general at Berlin refused the visa as a matter of routine under a mandatory immigration law. In applying for a visa, Von Cramm said he had served in a German prison and had not appealed. The immigration law is effective in such cases.

Wooderson, Cunningham Vie For New Mile Record Today

By the Associated Press

Princeton, N. J., June 16.—Prospects are good for the fastest mile ever run on two legs when Sidney Wooderson, England's wonder Sprite, meets four of America's top milers, including Glenn Cunningham, in the feature attraction of tomorrow's sixth annual Princeton invitation track meet.

Wooderson, holder of the world's outdoor record of 4:06.4 for the classic distance, has had four satisfactory workouts on the famous Palmer Stadium track. He's feeling great and has his heart set on establishing a record that might stand for his lifetime. The figure in his mind and in that of his coach, Albert Hill, is 4:03.

Must Set the Pace

To skim the mile at such a phenomenal pace, the little London solicitory realizes he will have to step out in front of Cunningham and his other three rivals—Chuck Fenske, Blaine Rideout and Archie San Romani—at the very start and run like a spotted fawn all the way, with never a thought of the pace being set by his pursuers.

If he doesn't do that, if he decides for some reason only to run to win and zeal his superiority over the Americans, it might not be an exceptionally fast mile, perhaps not better than 4.10. But Wooderson hasn't talked that kind of a race. He nodded agreement yesterday as his coach mapped out the plan by which he thought Sydney could run a 4:03.8 1-3—60 seconds for the first quarter, 61 for the second, 62 for the third, 60 for the fourth.

Glenn the Man to Beat

In the opinion of most track followers, Cunningham is the man Wooderson has to beat. "Old Bones" has been complaining of lack of condition, and that's usually bad news for his opponents. Chuck Fenske, Wisconsin's fleet captain of last year, also is trained down to a fine edge and has his supporters. He did a 4:08.8 mile last year. San Romani won the Princeton mile of 1937 in 4:07.2. Rideout's best time for the mile this year was 4:10.8, so he has not been considered a serious threat to Wooderson.

Central Annexes High Tennis Title

Central yesterday won the interhigh school tennis championship by defeating Roosevelt, 4 to 3, in a post-season playoff at the Sixteenth and Reservoir courts. The rivals were tied for the lead at the end of the regular schedule.

Central built up a 3-to-0 advantage in the first three singles matches and clinched the victory when Len Sokol and Clarke won the first of the two doubles matches.

Singles

Sokol (C) defeated Kay, 6—1, 6—3; Clarke (C) defeated Gottlieb, 11—9, 1—6, 6—3; Maier (C) defeated Bruce, 6—3, 6—3; Parrington (R) defeated Schattman, 6—2, 4—6, 6—2; Fisher (R) defeated Rubin, 6—1, 6—1.

Doubles

Sokol and Clarke (C) defeated Parrington and Kay, 6—2, 2—6, 6—2; Gottlieb and Fisher defeated Maier and Schattman, 6—1, 6—2.

Johnstown, Six Others Nominated for Dwyer

Derby Winner Gets Chance Today to Avenge Pimlico Defeat by Challedon and Volitant; Woodward Colt Held 1 to 3 Favorite

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 16.—Johnstown gets his chance tomorrow to pay Challedon and Volitant back for the lacing they gave him in Pimlico's mud on Preakness Day in May.

Seven were named ktoday for the running of the mile and an eighth—Dwyer at Aqueduct and among them were William Woodward's Colorbearer and his two main rivals for 3-year-old honors—volitant from the Saratoga Stable and Challedon, the Maryland mudlark, owned by W. L. Brann of Frederick, Md.

Sun Lover from the Chicago-owned Millsdale Stable; William Ziegler's Time Sheet, a substitute for the disappointing juvenile champion, El Chico; Trailer, upon whom Alfred G. Vanderbilt pinned his hopes after Impound went wrong, and Thellusson, a stablemate of Johnstown.

Surprise Nomination

The big roan Thellusson, a son of Gallant Fox, which once won the Dwyer himself, was a surprise nomination because he ran only Thursday, defeating a fair field, but in the fast mile time of 1:37, and easily, too. Sunny Jim Fitzsimmons, who trains for Woodward, wasn't sure tonight whether Thellusson would start, but if he does even Johnstown may have trouble running down the fleet son of the Fox.

Only once has "Big John" tasted defeat in his 3-year-old campaign, which has included the Kentucky Derby, Preakness and Belmont. That was in the mud at Pimlico and there he ran a dismal fifth after setting the pace most of the way as Challedon scored easily.

He seemed to sprawl then, but on fast footing nothing has been able to catch him.

Today's line had Johnstown at 1 to 3, but it was likely that the bookmakers may make him as short as 1 to 10 before post time if the going is fast.

It's likely they will lay 4 or 5 to 1 against Challedon, second in the Derby, and as much as 8 against Volitant, the bad-tempered son of Display, which defeated a good field at Aqueduct last Saturday, and ran third in the Preakness.

As for the others, they say, you can just about name your own price.

The Dwyer is a $10,000 added event and as a supporting attraction the track will have the Carter Handicap, at 7 furlongs, with such as Sir Damion, Lovely Night, Thanksgiving, Fighting Fox and the Chief among the entries.

Jimmy Stout, as usual, will ride Johnstown. Don Meade will be up on Volitant and Challedon will be handled by the familiar George Seabo. The weatherman says it will be cloudy but fast, and so it looks like a royal battle for the honor of runner-up, with Johnstown on the head end.

Horse.	Wt.	Jockey.	Odds.
Challedon	126	Seabo	3-1
†Johnstown	126	Stout	1-3

Cruikshank's 144 Paces Virginia Open

Danville, Va., June 16.—Bobby Cruickshank, five-time champion from Richmond, bombed the Danville Golf Club hills with sub-par ammunition this afternoon to come from behind and take a 1-stroke lead at the half-way mark on the annual 72-hole Virginia State Open Tournament.

The veteran Scottish mite took a 75, five over par on the morning round, his card including a disastrous 6 on the short fourth. The afternoon siege told a contrasting story of a Cruicky who had the range with all of his shots for a 35-34—69, and a 36-hole total of 144.

Trailing by a stroke was Chandler Harper, slender defending title holder from Portsmouth, who set the morning pace with a 71 and added a 74 for 145 in the afternoon. He had an even par 35 going out, but a cranky putter on the back 9 dissipated his early advantage.

The trophy for adversity should go to Hugh McLellan, good-natured Scot from Newport News' Old Dominion course. He had a nice 73 in his morning round and added a sizzling 2-under-par 33 going out in the afternoon. A crowd of several hundred gathered at the eighteenth to see him come in after Cruicky's and Harper's cards had been posted. He could have gone 2 ovr par on that back layout and led the field. But, emulating Sam Snead's famous 8 in the National Open, he lost two balls and staggered home with a heart-breaking 48, an aggregate of 154.

Three strokes back with 148's were Jack Isaacs, Langley Field, and Rut Coffey, Winchester. Both were in difficulty this morning but played well in the afternoon, Coffey matching par 70 on his second attempt, the best effort next to Bobby's.

Nelson Long, the smashing hitter from the Hot Springs mountains, still had a chance at top money with a 150.

N.Y. Bookie, Worth $125,000, Convicted On Vagrancy Count

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 16.—Frank A. Erickson, race track bookmaker, who produced $125,000 worth of securities Monday to prove he was no vagrant, was convicted on a vagrancy charge today.

Erickson was arraigned under the State Vagrancy Law which defines a vagrant as a person "with no apparent business or profession who maintains himself principally by gaming."

His attorney, Martin W. Littleton, contended in a 45-minute address to the court that the prosecution had failed to prove its case, which he said was based on three inferences; that Erickson was a gambler, that his gambling was successful, and that it was so successful he needed no other source of income.

Magistrate Irving Ben Cooper ordered Erickson to post a $10,000 bond which required him to refrain from gambling for one year.

smashed out a single into leftfield and two runs crossed the plate. When Frasier loaded the bases again by walking Kelley, Dykes got him out of there in favor of Marcum, who eased the tension for the Sox by ridding the scene of Case on a fly to Walker.

In the fourth the Sox hacked a run off Kelley's 4-0 lead after Walker reached first on Lewis' fumble. With one out, Appling, Kreevich and McNair singled in succession to produce a run, but the damage was halted at that point by Lewis, who came up with McNair's hot smash and converted it into a double play via Bloodworth and Prichard.

Flurry of Trouble

There was a flurry of trouble for Kelley in the eighth, too. Joe Kuhel led off with a double against the rightfield wall, but advanced only to third on Walker's looping single to leftfield. Radcliff flied to Wright and Kuhel, for no reason at all, attempted to score after the catch. He was out, from here to there, and went back to the bench to be greeted by the baleful glance of Manager Jimmy Dykes.

The Sox came up with a run in the inning, however, when Kelley with two consecutive wild pitches, moved Walker from first to third. Appling singled to right to score Walker, and then stole second, but Bobby Estalella obliged Kelley by racing back to the wall for Kreevich's third-out fly.

About that Washington run in the eighth: Bobby Estalella inspired it when he singled to left. Bloodworth sacrificed him to second and then Rookie Bob Prichard drove a single to center to drive in his first major league run.

Manager Bucky Harris reaffirmed his faith in the tall Benezuelan yesterday, declaring: "He has shown me he has enough on the ball to be a winning pitcher. His recent defeats are puzzling, but I have not given up on him."

It was against the Browns during the Nats' last home stand that Alex turned in his feature performance of the season—a three-hit victory.

Toledo, Ohio, June 16.—Denny Shute and Ernie (Dutch) Harrison, of Chicago, won two matches today to take the lead in the fifth annual Inverness $5,200 four-ball tournament.

The Shute-Harrison combination, 10 under par for the day's 36-hole grind, turned in a three-up victory over Ed Dudley and Ky Laffoon in the morning, and then came back for a one-up triumph over Horton Smith and Lighthorse Harry Cooper, tossing that duo out of the lead.

The 16 top-flight professionals banged 74 birdies and two eagles into the cups in today's 36 holes, and when the smoke cleared away the standing, with four matches to be played by each pair still coming up, was:

Shute and Harrison, plus 6; Smith and Cooper, plus 5; Henry Picard and John Revolta, plus 4; Walter Hagen and Gene Sarazen, and Sam Snead and Vic Ghezzi, even; Byron Nelson and Harold (Jug) McSpayden, minus 2; Jimmy Thomson and Tommy Armour, minus 6, and Dudley and Laffoon, minus 7.

Under the Inverness scoring system, a team gets a "plus" for each hole won, and a "minus" for each hole lost, with scores being carried over for the duration of the event. Today's matches, with the best ball scores of the teams in parenthesis:

Morning Round

Picard-Revolta (63), 4 up on Nelson-McSpayden (67).

Snead-Ghezzi (67), even with Hagen-Sarazen (67).

Smith-Cooper (68), 4 up on Thomson-Armour (72).

Shute-Harrison (63), 3 up on Dudley-Laffoon (67).

Afternoon Round

Hagen-Sarazen (66), 2 up on Picard-Revolta (68).

Snead-Ghezzi (65), even with Thomson-Armour (65).

Shute-Harrison (69), 1 up on Smith-Cooper (70).

Nelson-McSpayden (68), 2 up on Dudley-Laffoon (69).

coaches. Even Buck Walsh, of Navy, got on the Bears' bandwagon today.

"If they don't win, then all of us might just as well quit, because there won't be any sense to it," said Walsh.

"If California's beaten, it will be just like a man who goes out to learn golf from the best teachers and uses the best equipment, only to lose to some dub who picked up the game by himself and uses whatever clubs he can get hold of."

Navy Coach Hopeful

Walsh, who lost five of his 1936 varsity men through graduation, hopes his Middies will be in there battling Cornell for the honor of being the first Eastern crew to finish the 4-mile haul.

"They beat us this year, and on form should do it again, but we may beable to give them a surprise," he said.

The freshman crews, rowing 2 miles, will lead off tomorrow at 3 p. m. (E.S.T.) with all but Navy represented. Wisconsin will be the only crew missing from the junior varsity 3-mile race, scheduled for 4 p. m., and all seven will be in there for the varsity battle an hour later.

Today the stage was virtually set. Close to both banks of the river, the 19 crews held their final workouts. Down the middle, over a mile and a half course, came the Syracuse "pickle boat" 'or substitute crew, to beat Navy and a California-Cornell combination and win a handsomely-decorated jar of dill pickles.

Tickets at Premium

In town, tickets for the 15-car observation train were at a premium. Less than 2,000 of the expected 50,000 spectators will see the contest from the train, but they will be the only ones who will see the races all the way. The majority of the crowd will be on private boats and excursio steamers anchored near the finish, and grouped along both banks of the river.

The only flaw in the picture was the weather man's forecast of "showers in the afternoon and at night."

Motor Taxes Dip First Time In 17 Years

A. I. P. Reports Total In 1938 Was 57.4 Millions Under 1937

New York, June 16.—Federal, State and local automotive taxes in the United States in 1938 cost American motor vehicle owners $1,507,582,000, which was $57,400,000 less than the Nation's automotive tax bill the previous year, the American Petroleum Industries committee reports after analysis of official 1938 tax figures. This 3.6 per cent decline is the first since 1921.

The average per vehicle tax during the year dropped from $52.69 in 1937 to $51.13 last year, which the committee believes may indicate the turning point in the trend, which has continued almost uninterruptedly upward.

The committee found that although there were fewer vehicles on the highways last year, those in operation were, on an average, driven 2 per cent farther than in the previous year. The analysis also explains the improvement in the condition of the Nation's used car market which developed during the year. While sales of new motor vehicles declined 1,845,631 cars and trucks, total registrations declined only 219,540, indicating that more than 1,600,000 used vehicles were kept in operation which normally would have been turned in on the sale of new cars or would have been junked.

Gasoline Tax Heaviest

The gasoline tax remains the heaviest tax borne by American motorists. In 1938 Federal, State and local gasoline tax costs amounted to $949,987,000, compared with registration and license fees of $388,825,000. Federal excise taxes on lubricating oil, tires and tubes, parts and accessories, and new automobiles and trucks totaled $84,699,000. Personal property taxes, motor carrier taxes, and local automotive licenses amounted to $84,071,000 more. Included in the gasoline tax bill are State gasoline tax receipts of $766,853,000, Federal gasoline tax receipts of $178,784,000, and county and municipal gas taxes of $4,350,000.

"Although there were no increases in State gasoline tax rates during the year," the committee reported, "State revenues from this source were approximately $10,000,000 in excess of those for the previous year. Since the number of registered motor vehicles declined, evidence seems to indicate that use of motor vehicles increased somewhat.

"It should be noted that in computing the cost of the Federal gasoline taxes to motor vehicle owners, only 89 per cent of the total collections were included, since about 11 per cent of the Federal gasoline tax is paid by those who consume gasoline in stationary engines, tractors and other non-highway motors. Likewise about 49 per cent of all lubricating oil is consumed in motor vehicles, and so only that proportion of the amount collected from the Federal Government's 4c per gallon lubricating oil tax was included.

"It is apparent that a general leveling off of the Nation's automotive tax burden has occurred in the past three years. It is the first time since 1921 that the total automotive tax load has decreased, and appears to be a good omen."

Cotton Futures Dip 1 to 4 Points

New York, June 16 (AP).—The cotton market didn't have much to work on today as traders again drew a blank out of the Washington legislative news bag. Closing prices were 1 to 4 points lower.

Selling pressure—represented by foreign liquidation, Southern offerings and hedging—met only fair demand from trade and mill accounts.

But operators were more inclined to wait and see what Congress will hatch affecting the staple than start an aggressive drive either way. Much of the activity represented week-end evening up.

Worth street reported fair inquiry for textiles, although actual business remained quiet. Commission men said the week's volume, while below the preceding period, was considered good in view of the price advances of last week.

New Jersey Cuts Bank Interest to 1%

Trenton, N. J. June 16 (AP).—New Jersey State banks, trust companies and savings institutions were directed today to pay no more than one per cent annual interest on time or savings deposits.

The order, effective July 1, was contained in a statement issued today by Louis J. Reilly, State Commissioner of Banking and Insurance. It was based on a recommendation of the banking advisory board. Banking department attaches said the present interest rates varied from one-and-one-half to two per cent.

McKee, Former SEC Investigator, Is Named in Fraud

The Department of Justice and the Securities and Exchange Commission yesterday reported that an indictment had been returned by the Federal grand jury in New York City against John J. McKee and Moe Platt, both of Brooklyn, for conspiracy to defraud the Government. The indictment was based upon an investigation conducted by the Securities and Exchange Commission, and was obtained by John T. Cahill, United States attorney for the Southern District of New York.

According to the indictment, John J. McKee, formerly an accountant-investigator of the commission attached to its New York regional office, was assigned on May 6, 1935, to investigate Moe Platt, doing business as Platt & Co., to determine whether there had been any violations of the securities act of 1933, and that thereafter he did participate in an investigation of that company's activities in the marketing of the stock of Backbone Gold Mining Co.

The indictment charges that McKee and Platt conspired to defraud the Government and to impair and obstruct its lawful functions, and that in furtherance of the conspiracy McKee advised Platt as to the ways and means of obstructing the Securities and Exchange Commission investigation, and assisted Platt in setting up books and records for Platt & Co. In return, according to the indictment, McKee from time to time received from Platt gifts of stock, and various cash loans in the amount of $50 each. In addition, it is charged, McKee was Platt's guest on a week-end party at Asbury Park, N. J.

Platt at the present time is free under a $5,000 bond guaranteeing his appearance at Pittsburgh, Pa., to answer charges of violation of the securities act of 1933.

Bank Officers Given Time to Pay Debts

The Senate approved and sent to the White House yesterday legislation designed to prevent 2,000 bank officials from losing their jobs June 30. The measure extends three years from June 30 the time in which officers and directors of Federal Reserve member banks may pay up obligations owed their banks.

An act requiring officials to liquidate their obligations to the banks was passed in 1933. Then, 7,000 bankers owed their banks $132,000,000. Senator Glass said that now 2,000 bankers owe $32,000,000. "Most of these have moderate salaries and are unable to pay up by June 30," the Virginia Senator told reporters. "Unless an extension were granted, they would be dismissed and couldn't pay their debts at all."

Cleveland Bronze Co. To Buy Airport Site

New York, June 16 (AP).—Directors of the Cleveland Graphite Bronze Co., manufacturers of metallic products, have authorized the purchase of the former Great Lakes Airport at Cleveland for a $2,500,000 building program, it was announced today in Wall Street.

The company, the announcement said, immediately will modernize and equip industrial buildings on the site to meet demands for its products from the automotive and aviation industries.

Wheat Prices Decline With Heavy Selling

However, Corn Closes Day ¼-½ Higher

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, June 16.—Continuation of wheat market selling based on improved crop prospects, encouraged by return of favorable harvest weather in the Southwest and rains and cool temperatures in the Northwest, today pushed wheat prices to the lowest levels in six weeks.

Losses of around a cent carried July contracts down to 72 cents for the first time since early May while September deliveries fell to 72¾. Hedging sales were in evidence. Scattered mill buying and some purchasing attracted by the slump helped to check the decline and there were modest rallies from mid-session lows but wheat closed ⅜@¾ lower than yesterday, July 72⅜@72½, September 73@73⅛.

Corn and oats refused to follow wheat, due largely to commercial demand, and closed with net gains. Rye dropped about a cent at one time but then rallied. Corn closed ¼@½ higher, July 49¾, September 51¼; oats ¼@⅜ higher; rye ⅜ off to ⅛ up; lard 2 to 5 higher.

Prospects of increased receipts of new wheat in the Southwest as harvest crews work northward was a bearish trade factor. Receipts at 12 principal interior terminals today totaled 1,025,000 bushels, almost 200,000 larger than a week ago and 400,000 larger than a year ago.

Oil Companies Raise Gasoline Price ½ Cent a Gal.

New York, June 16 (AP).—The price of gasoline has been advanced ½-cent a gallon by 19 major oil companies in various sections of the United States, matching an increase instituted last week by Sinclair Refining Co., a checkup showed today.

Gasoline distributing authorities said Pacific Coast and New England were virtually the only States unaffected, for the moment, at least, by the increase.

Three major companies which did not join in the advance were Standard Oil of New Jersey, Sun Oil Co., and Atlantic Refining Co.

Although Socony-Vacuum Oil Co., and subsidiaries were reported to have made ½-cent advance in 15 States, a company spokesman said no change had been made in the Northeastern section of the country.

The increase, it was said, applies to all grades of tank-wagon deliveries.

Prices Hold Steady After Irregular Opening, Trading Dull; U. S. Government Issues Dip

New York, June 16.—After Thursday's flurry on the downside share markets settled back once more to the serious business of being dull. Besides, there were additional imponderables for the contemplation of those pursuing the will-'o-the-whisp of profits.

These included the new gestures on inflation in Washington and the indications of American involvement in Great Britain's latest difficulties with the Japanese.

Securities markets opened a bit irregular caused by a small carryover of selling but when further offerings failed to come out the crust over quotations hardened giving shares a steady appearance. Merchandise and petroleum groups stiffened a little but in other sections last prices were unchanged to fractionally lower, the composite for the 100 stocks was off 3/100ths of a point and big board dealings were just under the 400,000-share level.

Traders Indifferent

The indifference of traders to news of proposals by the Administration to continue to spend outside the budget, and the Thomas-McCarran bill to authorize the printing of $2,000,000,000 of money backed by gold, was eliquent of the skepticism which reigns following six abortive years of effort to reflate or inflate, resulting only in deflation.

The fact that bonds, particularly the Government list, showed soft spots could be traced to lack of buying interest rather than to inflation ballyhoo. The more substantial holders of bonds are not to be found in the financial marts these days but are enjoying themselves in cooler spots.

Business News Cheerful

Business news was generally encouraging and as such would tend to stem any recurrence of the selling which occurred Thursday on bearish international developments. Motor car production made a contra-seasonal gain to 78,305 units from 65,265 although this was due largely to the Chrysler resumption after the three weeks suspension caused by the Briggs strike. Various agencies, however, reported that June sales in the automotive industry are ahead of expectations so far. Chrysler gained ⅝ and General Motors was unchanged, both on active dealings.

Steel Stocks Steady

Steel stocks showed little change but operating forecasts pointed to another increase in the ingot rate next week. Youngstown expects to lift schedules 4 points to 56 per cent, the best rate for the district since last fall. Analysts, however, believe that even more substantial operations will be required to offset the cut in profit margins resulting from the "bargain sale" which producers conducted in flat-rolled products last month.

Adverse Court Ruling

For the steel corporation, the current break-even point is estimated between 50 and 55 per cent of capacity with other leaders in about the same boat. Quite a bit of guessing was in evidence as to the ultimate effect on United States steel of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals decision at Philadelphia in the Steckel patents case. The court ruled that Carnegie-Illinois, principal operating subsidiary of United States steel, had infringed on two patents owned by the Cold Metal Process Co. and must pay damages and profits.

Cold-rolling processes, said to be an important part of Big Steel's mills, including the recently completed Irvin works at Pittsburgh, are said to be concerned by the decision. The amount of liability is to be determined by a special master appointed by the Federal District Court of New Jersey, where the litigation originated.

United States Rubber Active

United States Rubber, leader in activity, made its first appearance on a block of 3,000 shares, off ⅜, but rallied to close a small fraction to the good. General Foods gained half a point and Westinghouse, American Smelting, Standard Oil of New Jersey and Pennsylvania Railroad were others to add something to their market prices. Union Pacific and Commonwealth & Southern each preferred lost a point.

Bond Trading Dull

Listed bonds failed to attract buyers, today, even on the small scale reflected by the equities division. Senior securities moved idly lower, with foreign dollar issues somewhat harder hit than the domestic variety, owing to the latest international complications. United States Treasury securities slowly receded, and speculative corporate bonds fell more swiftly. Turnover in all issues was $4,910,000.

Foreign Bonds Generally Lower

Australian bonds were marked downward, as reports of the Far Eastern situation grew more ominous. The government issues sold only fractionally lower, but some of the municipals showed losses to 3 points. Canadians were relatively firm. Japanese obligations remained irregular. Scandinavian and French bonds slipped slightly, but Belgians were firm. European and Latin-American default bonds alike were under modest pressure.

Treasury Issues Recede

United States Treasury securities showed recessions ranging from one-thirty-second to one-half point, but the larger declines were in inactive bonds. The indicative long term bonds now are a shade more than a point under recent highs. Guaranteed issues of the farm and home corporations were soft. Telephone bonds firmed in the idle corporate list, and best rated power and light issues were irregular. Leading rails and industrials were neglected.

Rail Liens Weak

Medium-priced railroad bonds remained soft, with losses ranging to 2 points. Borderline and default carrier bonds were uncertain. Allegheny Corporation bonds were not affected by the change in titular leadership, and utility holding issues were similarly quiet. Some industrial convertibles developed a better tone, but all changes were modest. Interborough bonds dropped sharply, while other local tractions held their ground.

Bituminous Production

The National Coal Association estimates bituminous coal production in the United States for the week ended June 10 as approximately 6,200,000 net tons. Production for the corresponding week: 1938, 4,937,000 tons; 1937, 7,058,000 tons. Percentage of change: 1938, increase 25.6 per cent; 1937, decrease 12.2 per cent.

New Security Issues Total $31,667,034

New York, June 16 (AP).—New security issues offered to the public during the week ended Thursday, totaling $31,667,034, represented 14 per cent new money, Poor's Publishing Co. reported today.

The amount was largely municipal financing. The new total was sharply under the large aggregate of last week, also largely municipal.

National Tea Will Receive $88,000 in Sales Tax Refund

St. Paul, June 16 (AP).—The National Tea Co. won a refund of chain store gross sales taxes paid under a Minnesota law that was repealed by extra legislature of 1937 today when the State supreme court declared the statute unconstitutional.

By the decision, which affirmed a Ramsey County district court ruling, the company will receive a refund of approximately $88,000 in gross sales taxes paid between enactment of the law in 1933 and its repeal.

Graduated taxes on chain store gross sales volume imposed by the act ranged from one-twentieth of one per cent on the first $100,000 to 1 per cent on $1,000,000.

The Supreme Court held the levy violated the fourteenth amendment of the Federal Constitution which guarantees to all persons "the equal protection of the laws." In addition, the opinion said, the law clashed with Article 9, Section 1, of the State Constitution which provides that "taxes shall be uniform on the same class of subjects."

United May Acquire Air Express Corp.

Stock Offers Are Denied by Western Air Spokesman

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 16.—Dow-Jones Co., in a Denver dispatch said today the proposal of United Air Lines Transport Corporation, to acquire control of Western Air Express Corporation, is understood to provide for two alternative offers to the latter's stockholders.

The first would be an exchange of stock on the basis of one-third share of United for each share of Western Air. The other provides for the payment of $1.66 in cash and one-sixth share of United for each Western Air share.

Negotiations currently are directed toward acquisition of 61 per cent, or 241,748 shares of the present outstanding Western Air stock from Charles Boettcher 2d, James Q. Newton, William A. Coulter and associates.

The straight stock option would require the issuance of a maximum of 136,740 United shares, while the maximum outlay under the second plan would be $680,965, plus 68,370 United shares.

Stock Offers Denied

Charles Boettcher 2d, chairman of the board of Western Air, was out of the city today and Alvin P. Adams, president of the company, was in Washington.

Yanks Turn Back Indians, 4-3

Atley Donald Wins Seventh Game in Row

Rookie Needs Relief, However; Campbell, Webb and Rolfe Hit Home Runs

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 16.—Bunching their hits to the best possible advantage, the New York Yankees squeezed past the Cleveland Indians, 4 to 3, today to take the three-game series two games to one.

Although he had to be relieved in the eighth, Rookie Atley Donald got credit for his seventh victory without defeat.

He gave seven hits, of which two were home runs—by Bruce Campbell in the first inning and Jim Webb in the fifth.

Cleveland's other run came in the eighth on a double by Oscar Grimes and singles by Webb and Rollie Hemsley. After Donald walked Ben Chapman to fill the bases he was replaced by Marius Russo, who fanned Jeff Heath to get out of trouble.

Yanks Bunch Hits

The Yankees were held to eight hits by Lefty Al Milnar and Harry Eisenstat, the latter working one hitless inning, but four of these blows came in the second inning for two runs and three others came in the fifth for two more scores.

All the trouble in the second came after two were out. Joe Gordon beat out a smash off Ken Keltner's glove to be followed by the successive singles of George Selkirk, Babe Dahlgren and Donald himself.

Red Rolfe put the champions back in front to stay by leading off in the fifth with a homer. Then Tommy Henrich doubled and Joe DiMaggio singled for the winning margin.

A's Beat Brown's, 11-10, End Losing Streak

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, June 16.—The Athletics ended a six-game losing streak today by scoring 3 runs in the ninth inning to beat the St. Louis Browns, 11 to 10.

Harlond Cliff's homer with one on in the top half of the ninth had given the Browns a 2-run lead, but George Gill was unable to stop the A's. Wally Moses led off in the ninth with a single. Dee Miles also singled and Bob Johnson walked. Vernon Kennedy replaced Gill, but Frankie Hayes blasted his first pitch to center for a single, tying the score. Sam Chapman then hit to Don Heffner at short and Johnson slid under his throw to Catcher Spindel with the winning run.

The Browns took a big lead in the second, scoring 7 runs on two triples, a double and five bases on balls, only to see the A's rally to tie the score at 8 to 8, when Bob Johnson homered with two on in the seventh.

Big Jim Arms for the Baseball Wars

Big Jim Murphy, the former big league pitcher whose heady coaching is largely responsible for Interior Department's lead midway of the Departmental League schedule, is caught dressing for his daily workout with the team. He takes his turn on the mound, and despite the years creeping up on him, can toss with the best of 'em

'Big Jim' Murphy Master-Mind Of Interior's Crack Nine

Former Cardinal Farmhand Plots His Strategy In Office at End of Labyrinth of Caverns

By Bill Burnett

You don't find the "brains" behind Interior Department's hot baseball team simply by walking in a building, knocking on a door and asking if Mr. Murph is in. You trudge through a labyrinth of air-cooled caverns, make four wrong turns, wind up in the engine room, eventually finding room 13A with the aid of a truck driver and several elevator operators.

Perhaps it's his inaccessability which gives big Jim Murphy time to plot the plays that won the first half, Departmental League, title for Interior's hearty lads. Perhaps Big Jim actually keeps his mind on the state of the Taos Indians throughout his eight-hour day.

There's no doubt, however, that he gives a lot of thought to his team's play at one time or another. He didn't win 10 and lose only one in his league without a bit of masterminding somewhere.

Big Jim might be called "the gent who came back to lead Interior out of the sandlot baseball wilderness." In 1936 he was the head man of a team, corresponding to the present nine but called P. W. A. at the time, that won its league pennant and romped into the finals of the city crown playoff. One thing and another, mostly a slightly better team sponsored by F. B. I., took the title away from the Interiors then, but it was considered a highly succesful season.

Last year Big Jim took his managerial and pitching talents into voluntary retirement. It was definitely Interior's loss. It never got within a country mile of the title, eventually winding up a poor fourth in the United States Government League.

Now Jim is back at the head of things. One-half of the season's regular play is over, and Jim has the boys in the driver's seat. The only thing worrying him is that a shift in the league's personnel is planned, and the stronger clubs to be added will put a strain on Interior. J. C. Flood and D. G. S., both of the Sunday National City League, may get bids for weekday play, and both have young and improving nines.

Big Jim's best baseball experience came from the four years he was under contract to the St. Louis Cards. He didn't work with the "Gas House Gang" all that time, but was on a continued call. Asked if he lost interest in playing big league ball, Jim admitted "it was the Cards lost interest, not me." He's right where he wants to be now, however, and you've got to admit he's doing a good job of it.

Demaree and Bonura Drive in Five Runs Against N. L. Champs

By the Associated Press

Chicago, June 16.—The New York Giants scooted to their eighth straight victory today and moved into third place in the National League with a 6-to-4 triumph in the finale of their series with the Chicago Cubs.

Frank Joseph Demaree, obtained from the Cubs during the winter, and Zeke Bonura, once of the Chicago White Sox, starred before their former townsmen. In the first inning Bonura tripled with two on bases and then scored on Demaree's single. In the fifth Demaree doubled two more runs home. Mel Ott accounted for New York's other run with a double in the third.

Detroit Wins 9th Straight, Beating Bosox

Five-Run Outburst In Fourth Inning Beats Boston, 8 to 7

By the Associated Press.

Boston, June 16.—The Detroit Tigers today walloped the Boston Red Sox for the fourth straight time, 8 to 7, to boost their winning streak to nine in a row.

A 5-run outburst by the Tigers in the fourth inning won the contest, although an eighth-inning splurge by the Bosox, in which they counted 4 times, left them only 1 short of tying the score.

Fox, Croucher, Averill, Gehringer all singled off Eldon Auker in the Tigers' big inning, with a pass and Tabor's error helping Detroit. Every safety but Gehringer's in this frame was of the scratch infield type.

Gehringer was the star of the Tiger batting attack, lofting a homer in the first inning, besides the single which kept the decisive rally alive.

Al Benton was taken out when the Red Sox got frisky in the eighth, but he received credit for the victory. Auker was the losing hurler.

Cardinals Halt Rally, Beat Dodgers, 7-6

By International News Service.

St. Louis, June 16.—Scoring four runs in the ninth inning today, the Brooklyn Dodgers were a run short of tying and fell, 7 to 6, before the Cardinals who thus moved to within 5½ games of Cincinnati which was unscheduled.

Their defeat dropped the Dodgers from third place into fourth as the New York Giants displaced them by beating the Chicago Cubs.

The Cards got six hits for five runs in the sixth inning and took a lead which the Dodgers tried fruitlessly to overcome. They routed Lon Warneke in the eighth and gave Curt Davis some trying moments in the ninth, but Lyn Lary fanned with the tying run on first, four in and two out.

Medwick and Padgett homered for St. Louis and Johnny Mize made three hits in three times at bat.

Bucs Defeat Bees, 4-2, On Handley's Triple

Pittsburgh, June 16.—Steady hurling by Bob Klinger and timely hitting by Lee Handley ended a six-game losing streak for Pittsburgh today by giving the Pirates a 4-to-2 victory over Boston.

Handley's triple in the first inning with two mates on base, two out and one run already across, provided the margin of victory. He drive in a third run in the sixth and also stole second twice, running his total for the season to 11.

Klinger was hit by a liner in the ninth and forced to retire, but from the fifth until that time he permitted the Bees to get but two balls out of the infield. One was a 400-foot homer by Hank Majeski in the sixth, the other a 400-foot liner off Max West's bat, snagged on the dead run by Lloyd Waner in the eighth.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

Today's quiz, which leans toward English rather than American bidding, is compiled from Terence Reese's questionnaire, appearing monthly in The British Bridge World. The answers, as well as the questions, are authored by him. You may grade yourself according to the number of times you are in agreement with the English export.

There are three questions; a perfect score is nine points.

Question 1

Both sides are vulnerable and the bidding proceeds:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	1 ♡	Pass	Pass

South holds:
♠ A 5
♣ A Q J 8 4 3

Dbl.

Question 2
(2 points)

Neither side is vulnerable, and the bidding proceeds:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Dbl.	Pass	1 NT.
Pass	?

West holds:
♠ Q J 10 9 4
♡ Q 3
♣ A K 6

What should West bid now?

Question 3
(4 points)

Assuming that on the two hands in the above problem East-West reach six hearts, and the diamond queen is led, how should West play the hand?

Answer

1. Double three clubs, two diamonds. This situation arose in the masters' pairs and all three bids were found at different tables. Two diamonds should go out first because if partner has little in either minor suit and does not give preference to clubs a bad result may follow. You should not want to be in diamonds unless partner has four of them. Actually North had three little diamonds and two little clubs, and when he passed two diamonds, the contract was just made, but the score was inferior to that obtainable in clubs. North had, however, a few cards in the major suits, and at one table he bid two no trump over two diamonds. South proceeded beyond the level of three no trump and lost points on the hand. Double is the best bid because it gives a picture of the all-round values and still leaves it open to South to bid two clubs or three clubs on the next round, while North has nothing but long and weak spades, the hand can be played in a part score of that suit. In play the double elicited one no trump from North, and South's bid is then three clubs. With a good holding in hearts North could bid three no trump, and this was the only game made.

2. Three spades. West should not make the mistake of raising in no trump, for it must be remembered that, at any rate in Culbertson and Acol, one no trump by East in response to the double, shows some strength in honors but does not guarantee a stop in the enemy suit. West should therefore bid three spades, leaving it to East to go four spades if he has no guard in hearts.

3. Take two rounds of diamonds and trump a third with the ace; return to hand and trump a fourth diamond with the eight; enemy may over-ruff with the jack, but that is all they will make. The solution may also be expressed in terms of a high cross-ruff, declarer cashing five side winners at the start.

The Federal Diary

By The Diarist

ANOTHER "bird walk" along the old C. & O. is scheduled for Sunday morning. The destination is "near Sycamore Island," which is booked by the National Park Service as "a very popular place for observing bird life."

In the afternoon on Sunday—to make the day one of Nature's very own—there will be a two-mile or more walk through the Leiter estate in Virginia, just across the Potomac from Glen Echo. Special buses will leave from 1416 F street northwest. Be there not later than 2 p. m.

THE EXHIBIT of American-made china in the lobby of the Interior Building continues to draw its onlookers. One of the biggest surprises it offers is the information that that gorgeous "Mexican" stuff in all the bright colors is made over in West Virginia. Imagine it! Another eye-opener is the information that Americans have been making good china for some 200 odd years. Started under Their Majesties, it seems.

Biggest division in the Department of Commerce is the Census Bureau, which is growing in anticipation of 1940, but which stays pretty big all the time now that it must make those industrial statistical surveys every odd year.

Director William L. Austin has some slick signs made up for the manufacturers. He assures them anything told for this census never will be used against them. No competitor will see it and it cannot be used for investigation or taxation purposes, he promises.

While on the census, it seems certain that "temporary" census building authorized by this Congress will not be temporary at all. Fact finding has become such a habit there's no stopping it now—not until the Government is in on our every secret.

A HEARING for two Government employes demoted "without stated reason" will be held Monday at 9 a. m. with E. R. Ballinger, director of personnel for the Treasury Department presiding, it was announced yesterday by the Washington Chapter of the Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists and Technicians.

THE SECOND project of a series of regional competitions for designs for Federal buildings was announced by Admiral C. J. Peoples, director of the Procurement division. It will be for the new post office and court house building at Evansville, Ind. To the winner will go $6,000 as an award and that much more for his services as consultant during the building's construction.

ASHLEY B. SOWELL, who has been with the Department of the Interior since early New Deal days, sails from New Orleans for Panama today to be the new commercial attache there. Under reorganization provisions, his new boss will be the State Department.

AT THE BUREAU of Standards they have a machine which tests the wrinkle proofness of fabric, but all is not smooth. The bureau has run up against the question of when is a wrinkle not a wrinkle. Dr. E. C. Dreby, of Yale University, will arrive July 5 to conduct some research on the subject. He'll be financed by the American Society for Testing Materials.

Bob Burns Says—

The records of successful folks will prove that it's the person who knows the most short cuts who gets ahead in this old world. In fact, I ain't known but one man who never got ahead by usin' short-cuts . . . and he was a lazy barber.

My Uncle Fud was terribly impressed by a business man who used a short-cut in puttin' over a business deal with him not long ago. Fud was standin' around for about three hours in a St. Louis Department Store. The floor-walker saw he was stumped about somethin' so he said, "Perhaps I can assist you, sir?" Fud blushed, and then stammered, "Well, it's my wife's birthday and I'd kinda like to get her some o' them fancy, ruffled garters."

The floorwalker said, "Why, the ladies don't wear those old-fashioned things anymore. Wait, I'll show you."

Then he screamed, "MICE!!"

Odd Fellows to Visit Tomb of Unknown

The Washington Oddfellows will conduct a pilgrimmage to the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier at 3 p. m. tomorrow at the close of a two-day memorial celebration. They will parade from the Fort Myer gate to the Amphitheater at 2:30 p. m.

Also on the memorial program are a banquet in the Willard Hotel at 7 p. m. today; third degree by the Falls Church Lodge No. 11 and drill by the Columbia Theta Rho Girls' Club No. 1 at 2:30 p. m. today at the Oddfellows Temple, 419 Seventh street northwest.

Birthday DinnerMonday For Dr. L.B. Swormstedt

The Alumni Association of the National Homeopathic Hospital will tender a banquet to Dr. L. B. Swormstedt Monday evening, his birthday. The party will be in the Raleigh Hotel. Dr. Swormstedt has been associated with the hospital since its establishment. He designed and presented the pins to the first class to graduate in 1895.

PULITZER PRIZE NOVEL

THE YEARLING

By Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings

CHAPTER XI

PA FORRESTER said, "Well, neighbor, let's have the news about that tormented bear."

Ma Forrester said, "Yes, and you scapers git the dishes washed afore you git too deep into it, too."

Her sons rose hurriedly, each with his own plate and some larger dish or pan. Jody stared at them. He would as soon have expected them to tie ribbons in their hair. She tweaked his ear on her way to her rocker.

"I got no girls," she said. "If these fellers wants me to cook for 'em, they kin jest clean up after me."

Jody looked at his father, pleading mutely that this piece of heresy be not taken home to Baxter's Island. The Forresters made short work of the dishes. Fodder-wing hobbled after them, gathering the scraps for all the animals. Only by feeding the pack of dogs himself, could he be sure of saving tid-bits for his pets as well. He smiled to himself, that there would be so much today to take to them. There was even enough cold food left for supper. Jody gaped at the abundance. The Forresters finished their work in a clatter, and hung the iron pots on nails near the hearth. They drew up their cowhide chairs and hand-hewn benches around Penny. Some lit corn-cob pipes and others shaved pairings of tobacco from dark plugs. Ma Forrester lipped a little snuff. Buck picked up Penny's gun and a small file and began to work on the loose hammer.

"Well," Penny began, "he takened us plumb by surprise."

Jody shivered.

"He slipped in like a shadow and killed our brood-sow. Laid her open, end to end, and only ate a mouthful. Not hungry. Jest low-down and mean."

Penny paused to light his own pipe. The Forresters bent to him with blazing splinters of pine.

"He come as quiet as a black cloud, into the wind. Made a circle to git his wind right. So quiet, the dogs never heered nor scented him. Even this un—even this un—" he leaned to stroke the feice at his feet—"was fooled."

The Forresters exchanged glances.

"We set out after breakfast, Jody and me and all three o' the dogs. We tracked that bear across the south scrub. We tracked him along the edge o' the saw-grass ponds. We tracked him thu Juniper Bay. We tracked him thu the swamp, the trail gittin' hotter and hotter. We come up with him——"

The Forresters gripped their knees.

"We come up with him, men, right smack at the edge o' Juniper Creek, where the water flows swiftest and deepest."

THE STORY, JODY THOUGHT, was even better than the hunt. He saw it all again, the shadows and the fern, the broken palmettos and the running branch water. He was bursting with the excitement of the story. He was bursting, too, with pride in his father. Penny Baxter, no bigger than a dirt-dauber, could outhunt the best of them. And he could sit, as he sat now, weaving a spell of mystery and magic, that held these huge hairy men eager and breathless.

He made the fight an epic thing. When his gun back-fired, and old Slewfoot crushed Julia to his breast, Gabby swallowed his tobacco and rushed to the fire-place, spitting and choking. The Forresters clenched their fists, and sat precariously at the edges of their seats, and listened with their mouths open.

"Gawd," Buck breathed, "I'd o' loved to o' been there."

"And where's Slewfoot gone?" Gabby begged.

"No man knows," Penny told them.

There was silence.

Lem said at last, "You ain't never oncet mentioned that dog you got there."

"Don't press me," Penny said. "I done told you he's wuthless."

"I notice he come outen it in mighty good shope. Not a mark on him, is there?"

"No, there's nary mark on him."

"Take a mighty clever dog to fight a bear and not git ary scratch on him."

Penny puffed on his pipe.

Lem rose and walked to him, towering over him. He cracked his knuckles. He was sweating.

"I want two things," he said hoarsely. "I want to be in at the death o' ol' Slewfoot. And I want that dog there."

"Oh my, no," Penny said midly. "I'd not cheat you, tradin' him."

"No use lyin' to me. Name your trade.

"I'll trade you old Rip, instead."

"Think you're foxy. I got better dogs than Rip right now."

Lem went to the wall and took down from its nails a gun. It was a London Fine Twist. The double barrels shone. The stock was walnut, warm and glowing. The twin hammers were jaunty. The fittings were chased and intricate. Lem swung it to his shoulder, sighted it. He handed it to Penny.

"RIGHT FROM ENGLAND. No more muzzle-loadin'. Fill your own shell-cases easy as spittin'. Stick your shells in—breech her—cock her—Bam! Two shots. Shoots as true as a eagle flies. Swap even."

"Oh my, no," Penny said. "This here gun is valuable."

"There's more where it come from. Don't argue with me, man. When I want a dog, I want a dog. Take the gun for him or by God I'll come and steal him."

"Well, all right, then," Penny said, "if that's the way it stands. But you got to promise before witnesses not to beat the very pudrin' outen me after you've hunted him."

"Shake." A hairy paw closed over Penny's hand. "Here, boy!"

Lem whistled to the feice. He took him by the scruff of the neck and led him outside, as though fearful even now of losing him.

Penny teetered in his chair. He balanced the gun indifferently across his knees. Jody could not take his eyes from its perfection. He was filled with awe that his father had out-witted a Forrester. He wondered if Lem would keep his promise. He had heard of the intricacies of trading, but it had never occurred to him that one man could get the best of another by the simple expedient of telling him the truth.

Talk went on into the afternoon. Buck had tightened up Penny's old muzzle-loader so that he thought it could be counted on. The Forresters were unhurried; unoccupied. Tales were told of old Slewfoot's smartness; of other bears before him; but none so clever as he. Chases were described in every detail. Dogs 20 years dead were called by name and by performance. Fodder-wing grew tired of them and wanted to go to the pond and fish for minnows. But Jody could not bear to leave this telling of old tales. Pa and Ma Forrester chirped and shrilled occasionally, then dozed off in between, like sleepy crickets. At last their infirmities took them over, and they slept soundly, side by side in their rockers, their dried old frames stiff even in their slumber. Penny stretched and rose.

He said, "I hate to leave good comp'ny."

"Spend the night. We'll have a fox chase."

"I thank you, but I don't like to leave my place without no man on it."

FODDER-WING tugged at his arm.

"Leave Jody stay with me. He ain't half seed my things."

Buck said, "Leave the young un stay, Penny. I got to go to Volusia tomorrow. I'll ride him by your place."

"His Ma'll rare," Penny said.

"That's what Ma's is good for. Eh, Jody?"

"Pa, I'd be mighty proud to stay. I ain't played none in a long while."

"Not since day before yestiddy. Well, stay, then, if these folks is shore you're welcome. Lem, don't kill the boy if you try out the feice afore Buck gits him home to me."

They shouted with laughter. Penny shouldered the new gun with his old one and went for his horse. Jody followed. He reached out one hand and stroked the smoothness of the gun.

"If 'twas anybody in the world but Lem," Penny murmured, "I'd be too ashamed to go home with it. I've owed Lem a trimmin' since he named me."

"You told him the truth."

"My words was straight, but my intentions was crooked as the Ocklawaha River."

"What'll he do when he finds out?"

"He'll want to tease me down. And after that, I'm hopin' he'll laugh. Good-by, son, 'til tomorrow. Be good now."

The Forresters followed to see him off. Jody waved after his father with a new sense of aloneness. He was almost tempted to call him back; to run after him and climb up in the saddle and ride home with him to the snugness of the clearing.

Fodder-wing called, "The 'coon's fishin' in a puddle, Jody! Come see!"

To Be Continued Tomorrow.
